It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTORY.

Phillips Exeter Academy is one of the few American schools which can boast of having attained the age of a century. Its founder, Hon. JOHN PHILLIPS, LL. D., who was himself for some years a successful teacher, had the wise foresight to launch and give direction to the school in his lifetime. During eighty-four of its hundred years, it had only two principals, the one for fifty, the other for thirty-four years. Dr. BENJAMIN ABBOT, the former of these, elevated the infant seminary to the highest rank, and won for himself a position as an educator of youth scarcely second to that of the most eminent masters of the great public schools in England. Dr. GIDEON L. SOULE, his successor, had already been a professor in the Academy for sixteen years, and upon being advanced to the principalship, fully maintained the authority and dignity of the office, and the well earned credit and standing of the school.

Among the many brilliant names upon the roll of instructors in the Academy, are those of RICHARD HILDRETH, for fourteen years, and JOSEPH G. HOYT, for eighteen years, who gained here, as they did subsequently in other fields of effort, the highest repute for learning and ability. Of the Academy to-day, it is enough to say that two of its professors, Messrs. WENTWORTH and CILLEY, have served for a quarter of a century each, with usefulness and distinction in no way inferior to those of the ablest of their predecessors, and that its methods, its traditions and its prestige have been fully preserved, while the continually increasing requirements of successive years have been abundantly met.

The general catalogue of Phillips Exeter Academy reveals some extraordinary facts. Beyond dispute the galaxy of great names which it contains is unequalled in the annals of any school in the country, within the like period. The wide diffusion of its more than five thousand Alumni is not less remarkable. Among them are found representatives from every state and territory of our own country, and from each of the four quarters of the globe.

In respect to its religious character this school is entirely free from sectarianism. The Founder provided that the Principal should be a member of a Calvinistic church, and that the Trustees and Instructors should be Protestants. Every student is required to be present at the daily devotional exercises in the Chapel, and to attend some church, regularly, on the Christian Sabbath. But no denomination controls the school, and the students, or their parents or guardians for them, have the power to choose what form of religious worship and church they will attend. The morals of all pupils are sedulously inquired into, and no boy whose influence threatens to be injurious is suffered to remain in the Academy.

The standard of scholarship of Exeter has always been of the highest. Students are expected to keep well up with their classes, and to do their work faithfully, in order to retain their connection with the school. There is no room in it for the idle or the incompetent. To have gone through the course of Exeter carries with it the assurance that the work has been thoroughly done.

In the discipline of the school as much freedom is allowed the pupils as is consistent with safety. This course has been found most efficacious in encouraging them to cultivate self-reliance, a sense of honor and true manly qualities.

As the one-hundredth anniversary of the foundation of Phillips Exeter Academy drew near, the friends of the institution assumed, with one voice, that the interesting and important event was to be celebrated by suitable memorial exercises. Meetings of those especially interested were accordingly called, at which it was determined that the celebration should be held at the close of the summer term, on June 20 and 21, 1883.

It was also decided that the exercises should consist of a Reunion of the Alumni, to be held on the evening of the former day; of an Oration and a Poem, to be delivered in the forenoon of the second day; and of Addresses by the presiding officer and distinguished guests, after the public dinner to be served in the afternoon of the second day.

A general Committee was appointed by the Trustees to take charge of the Centennial Observances, consisting of MESSRS. CHARLES H. BELL and JOHN C. PHILLIPS of their own Board, GEORGE A. WENTWORTH of the Faculty, and PRENTISS CUMMINGS of Boston, Mass., and ARTEMAS H. HOLMES of New York, N. Y., of the Alumni.

Invitations were given to HON. GEORGE BANCROFT, LL. D., of Washington, D. C., to preside at the dinner; to REV. HORATIO STEBBINS, D. D., of San Francisco, California, to deliver the Oration; to EDWARD HALE, A. B., of Cambridge, Massachusetts, to recite the Poem; and to the Principal, ALBERT C. PERKINS, Ph. D., to make the Address of Welcome to the Alumni.

Each of the gentlemen named accepted the part assigned him.

It is only necessary to add that the gathering of the Alumni was fully equal to the most sanguine expectation, that the occasion was full of enjoyment to them, and highly satisfactory to every friend of Phillips Exeter Academy.

NOTE. It is proper to state that most of the Addresses are printed from the stenographer's report, without revision by their authors.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

On the evening of Wednesday, June 30, the meeting of the Alumni was held in the Academy hall. ALBERT C. PERKINS, Ph. D., the Principal of the Academy, presided, and delivered the following

ADDRESS OF WELCOME.

I do not know who it was that first took from Lucretius the phrase alma mater and applied it to a school of learning. The readiness with which men have accepted and adopted it is proof that no other name more fitting or more significant could be found. The personality of such a parent is indeed somewhat intangible. No artist can draw her lineaments or define her stature. But her character, her guiding influence, her capacity to encourage and help her children, her love and solicitude for them while they are under the roof-tree, her watchful anxiety for them when they have let go her hand and have bidden her good bye are all solid realities that are felt in the lives of thousands of men. Many elements go to make up the qualities of our cherishing mother. All that lingers in the atmosphere and constitutes the genius loci is a part of her. The aim of the founders, the influence of early instructors, the way in which that influence has been perpetuated, the achievements of generations of men who were trained under her, the aroma exhaled from story and tradition, the name and fame of preacher, statesman, lawyer, teacher, historian, poet, healer, man of art, man of business, all are united in filling our conception of the traits assigned to this beloved mother. I can easily believe that you, who come back here to-day, are glad to recognize this close and tender relationship. I can assure you that all that this relationship implies is bound up in the welcome extended to each and every one of you. Some of you were here in the early years of the century. You have heard the story of the school from the lips of men who personally knew John Phillips; you thus link us to the day a hundred years ago, when for Phillips Exeter Academy it was "time for school to begin." You remember Dr. Abbot in the prime of his manhood, and you are able to reproduce, as no one else can, the spirit of those days of hope and promise, as well as of fulfilment. We look upon you, and with renewed sense of the truth of the words we say: The glory of children are their fathers.

Others of you, the great body of the Alumni who are now in the active business of life, bearing the brunt of affairs, were here under the instruction of Dr. Soule. Ten years ago he was here to welcome me. The shadows of advancing years touched him gently, and brought out a sweetness, rare even in the ripest old age. A father wrapt in the interests of a son could not extend to him counsel more kind and considerate than that which I received from him. My acquaintance with him of six years enables me to imagine somewhat of the cordial paternal cheer with which he would have greeted you and bidden you to this feast, if his eye could have seen this day. Let the memory of him, as it abides here in freshness and beauty, be the best greeting we can give to you.

A thousand busy men are living who have joined our school within the last ten years. These, more than anybody and everybody else, are the school of to-day. They come from colleges, from professional schools, from the first steps of the slippery steep on which they are feeling that the work of life has fully begun. The "shades of the prison house" have not yet wholly closed around them. We hear the ringing tones of their voices, the confident word of hope, and feel the rush of that enthusiasm that keeps the world forever young. Our festival would be a lonesome place without them; and with no cold or formal words we summon them. The fathers shall see the same boys in them that were here of another generation. Perhaps too they will feel that the bond which unites us most firmly is the survival of something of the boyish spirit, and that in a gathering like this we can take liberties with Shakespeare and say :

"One touch of boyhood makes the whole world kin."

We gladly salute those not of our household, sons of other schools, benefactors, helpers in the work of training men. The "common bond" surrounds us and includes within it all who, like our founders, have set "virtue and piety" and "sound learning" as the imperishable jewels of the soul.

"There are few spectacles more striking or more affecting than that which a great historical place of education presents on a solemn public day." So said Macaulay at Glasgow when the famous University had reached the end of four centuries. So say we at the end of our first century, ~~as~~ we have turned towards the four winds in quest of the children of the Academy, as we have seen them coming from the ends of the earth and gathering around us with their wealth of honors and precious influences, their record of the impress they have stamped upon the history of their time.

But, after all that can be said, the warmest welcome you will receive must be one not uttered in words. A sentiment pervades the air; it finds expression in the thrill that darts through the clasped hands of old friends, in the gleam that lights the faces of those who come home again to find that sweetness of which they have been able to sing, but not to taste, in the message which the voice of nature shall speak to them as they walk over this ground and pass beneath these trees. It was under the sway of emotions, kindled by thoughts like these, at the commemoration day of a great university, that once in his life the matchless tongue of Edmund Burke faltered and became mute.

It is well that in an age like this, so busy, so practical, so secular, there remains one pious pilgrimage holding a firm place in the affections of the best men—the pilgrimage which the scholar makes to the scene of his early struggles and victories. There he finds what to him comes nearest to the fountain of perpetual youth; there he slakes his thirst with never-failing draughts; there he learns to adjust himself to the world around him; there he clarifies his vision, dimmed it may be by ambition, or greed, or disappointing failure; there, let us ever devoutly pray, he shall never cease to hear the greeting of a fond mother for her returning child. Our salutation is at the end, not of a year, but of a century. It is full of the memory of what that long period has accomplished for the school, for the country and for the world. We expect to hear much, we ought to hear much of all this; but still in an age of progress so wonderful, we do not feel afraid to set our growing school before the eyes of men, to point to her sons girdling the earth with sources of light, enriching literature, science, art, politics, religion, and ask What century plant has produced a fairer flower?

I am now permitted to present to you one of the most highly honored of the sons of the Academy—one who was here early in the present century, a pupil of Dr. Abbot, a life-long friend of Dr. Soule, widely known as a friend of sound and liberal learning—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.

ADDRESS OF PROF. ALPHEUS S. PACKARD, D. D.

I entered the Academy, June, 1811, having been admitted on the "Phillips Foundation." I found at Capt. Halliburton's, where those on the "Foundation" boarded, among others, Jared Sparks, John Gorham Palfrey, and Charles Briggs, all on their last term in the Academy before entering Harvard. Those in this position are often called "charity students." They were none the worse for that, none the worse for themselves, nor for the Academy. Not one of us, I am sure, has ever been ashamed of the appellation. Could the record of the "Phillips Foundation" be examined it would, I think, afford an argument in the question recently raised regarding the value of such charities.

I recall with peculiar interest the assistant, then on his last term of service, Nathan Lord, in subsequent years President of Dartmouth.

At the opening of the next academic year, September or October, 1811, a lad was admitted on the "Foundation" to one of the places made vacant by the entrances to college, the son of a prominent clergyman of Massachusetts, George Bancroft. We were fellow foundationers, fellow boarders, and a part of the time classmates during that year. I had advantage of my comrade in one respect, and I acknowledge in one respect only, which, however, I have held ever since; I was a year or more older. The record has it, that I entered at twelve, he at eleven. He entered Harvard, myself at Bowdoin. Our paths have been widely divergent. It is nearly sixty-seven years since we had speech of each other, and, I may say, that among special attractions to this celebration has been the hope of meeting my school-mate of seventy-one years ago.

I do not, I trust, violate the propriety of the occasion by referring to a scene of our academic life. Older Alumni remember the exercise in declamation Wednesday afternoons in the Academy Hall. On one of those occasions, Bancroft in a dialogue personated an old man, a father, in breeches, long hose, shoes with buckles, and a bob-wig. His personation was done to the life. The Principal, Mr. Abbot, Prof. Hildreth the assistant, and Henry W. Fuller, had seats on the floor near the entrance. From the side benches near them, I noticed the dignified Principal shaking his sides with laughter at the spectacle on the stage at the farther end of the hall, of the little old man, with emphatic pointing of his forefinger, expostulating in sharp, high-strung tones of displeasure.

It is a tradition, that a German master as he entered his school-room was accustomed to doff his hat, reverentially, to his pupils. When asked the meaning of that act he replied, "because among my boys may be future syndics and burgomasters of the city;" thus obeying the precept of Juvenal, "Reverentia maxima debetur puero." Those who were in the small circle at Capt. Halliburton's in my day thought little of the future that awaited them; one to hold a marked position in the ministry of a church in Baltimore, then to establish wide and lasting reputation by contributions to American history in the lives of Washington and Franklin, and in volumes of the diplomatic correspondence of their country, and lastly to become Professor and then President of Harvard; another after a ministry in a historic church of Boston, to hold a professorship in Harvard and a seat in Congress, and to win a name as the accomplished and faithful historian of New England; and that Worcester boy of eleven! whatever his promise in academic or college days, no soothsayer could have predicted, nor any phantasy of his own suggested, what awaited him in coming years, of honors and responsibilities in the Cabinet at Washington, of foreign embassies at the courts of St. James and Berlin, nor of that which, more than any position in civil life, will bear his name to future generations,—that a labor of fifty or more years in libraries and archives of his own and foreign lands would make him the standard historian of the United States. Let me add, that I question whether any event has touched his heart more than the invitation to preside on this occasion. While thus honored himself, he needs no assurance that the Alumni feel that his acceptance of the chair honors them.

The idea by such an occasion as this is naturally suggested, how important such an institution is to the country! The famous schools of England, Eton, Harrow on the Hill, Charter House, Rugby, how have they contributed to the stability and fame of England! When the Marquis of Wellesley was drawing near his end, in remembrance of his school-days, he enjoined that his body should be laid in the chapel of Eton; and his more renowned brother, the Iron Duke, when he revisited the same school of his early life, and was reminded of the achievements of his life in its prime, exclaimed, "It was at Eton that Waterloo was won;" and in our time that same school sent to Oxford, then to Parliament, and lastly to the position he now holds as one of the ablest, if not the ablest and most cultured of the prime ministers of England, William E. Gladstone. The names I just now mentioned on the "Phillips Foundation" of my day, and I will add those of the twin-brothers, William Bourne Oliver and Oliver William Bourne Peabody, valued names in this town, of Jonathan P. Cushing, who afterwards left an honored remembrance as President of Hampden Sidney College in Virginia, and I must add, that of Gideon Lane Soule, who came on the "Foundation" a year after me, whose eminent service of fifty years was duly commemorated when he retired from office,—these names alone would give character and reputation to any institution. Let me remind the members of the Academy now present, that it is an inspiration to recall the remembrance of eminent men who have frequented the walks, and sat in the halls, under the eminent teachers of this great school.

We ought to be thankful for the endowment of memory. We may wish to forget many things, but who would forget the precious reminiscences this occasion revives? To us, who have reached "the snowy summits of our years," it is a compensation for some of the infirmities of advanced age, that while the present leaves dim traces on the memory—the past, by the constitution of our nature, is yet distinct and fresh. We can look back and down to far distant vales yet bathed in the sunlight of early days. I beg to add a tribute of grateful acknowledgement for what I owe to this venerable Institution; to the unsurpassed dignity, the friendly oversight, spirit of firm yet gentle command, and high tone of scholarship, which were, and have been, maintained from its birth to its centennial day.

Dr. Perkins said: There is one of our sons living in a neighboring town whom I have found through an experience of many years, to be a most remarkable neighbor,—one who is always seeking to do favors and never asking them. It is due to him, very largely, that we are able to look on the representations of the faces of so many of the Alumni and trustees and teachers of the school as adorn these walls; and, if pictured lips could ever speak, I am sure they would utter his name every time he steps within this chapel. I call upon this honored benefactor to address you now—Ex-Governor Prescott.

ADDRESS OF HON. BENJAMIN F. PRESCOTT.

Mr. Chairman: I will not attempt to reply to your flattering introduction, because in so doing I should be obliged to refer to my own work, which might have the appearance of egotism, a quality of character which I have always supposed I did not possess. This gallery of portraits, medallions, and marble busts, with the exception of two or three, may be owing to my personal efforts. The photographs and other works of art are due to the efforts of others. My only regrets are that many more are not upon the walls that rightfully belong here, and which I hope will soon adorn the collection. The group represents, so far as it goes, the faces of those who have been closely identified with the Academy. Its influence upon the pupils, I hope, is salutary. If it is, I am amply paid for my labor. But sir, I will pass this matter altogether. In order to keep within the time allotted for this occasion, I have put upon paper certain facts I wish to set forth, and which, if trusting to an ex tempore address, I might omit. The facts and figures may be new, and perhaps of interest to the Alumni and the public who have looked forward with great interest to this memorable occasion.

Mr. President :—We are coming together after an absence of many years, to exchange congratulations around the shrine of this ancient, revered, and renowned institution. We esteem it a precious privilege to be present when its record of an hundred years may be properly set forth in song and speech, by the eminent men who have been designated to take part in the exercises.

And now at the beginning of these centennial festivities we are more than ever impressed with the magnitude of its success, and the grandeur of its history.

The Founder, the distinguished patron of learning in his time, builded greater than he knew, and the result of his munificent donation here has accomplished more for the good of mankind than he ever expected or anticipated. The founding of this seminary of learning by Mr. Phillips was a bold step at the time it was done, for the Revolution was not over, and it was uncertain when peace would be declared between the colonies and Great Britain. But a good cause never waits for uncertainties.

This was the first charter to a literary institution granted by the state. The General Assembly was in session in this town. It was its second session. It met on the second Wednesday of March in the fifth year of the declared independence of the United States. On Tuesday, April 3, 1781, the liberal charter was granted. The instrument had been well considered and matured by Mr. Phillips and his friends. The first Constitution of the then young state was not adopted until October 31, 1783. Thus the charter of this venerable institution antedates the fundamental law of the state by more than two and one-half years. The treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain was signed November 3, 1783, hence our alma mater is older than the declared independence of the United States, and nearly ten years the senior of the Constitution of the Republic. The institution then is entitled to respect by age, if for nothing higher or better.

Through wise counsels the Academy was set in motion on a broad and liberal policy, and its doors were opened to the youth of the land, with no other requirements, except that they present satisfactory evidences of good character and minds susceptible of development. The Academy has been remarkably fortunate in its board of trust and instructors. During its long and eventful history, it has had but thirty-six trustees by election, while seven are necessary to constitute a full board. Many of this number have served from twenty-five to forty years each. The same fact is true in reference to its principals. From 1783 to 1788 it was experimental, and was under the management of William Woodbridge. Dr. Benjamin Abbot, the Nestor of American instructors if not the world's, commenced his career as principal in 1788, and held and fully maintained that responsible position for fifty years, when, in 1838, he retired full of honor, commanding the respect and love of all who knew him. He was dignified, courteous, watchful, and kind. Dr. Gideon L. Soule began his labors in the Academy in 1822, as an instructor in the ancient languages, and served with distinguished ability in that chair until 1838, a period of sixteen years, when he was unanimously elected principal to succeed Dr. Abbot, and he served in that position thirty-five years, making fifty-one years of continuous service, the combined service of the two being 101 years, and the principalship, eighty-five years, a fact not known in the history of this or any other country. He, too, retired like his predecessor, beloved by all, and commanding universal respect. At the retirement of Dr. Soule, in 1873, the present principal, Dr. Albert C. Perkins, commenced his duties as governor of the school, and took upon his shoulders the mantle that had been so gracefully worn by his predecessor. He has served a decade, having had more than a thousand pupils under his management. The school has materially increased in numbers under his wise administration, and he, too, lays aside the mantle untarnished, which he received from his illustrious predecessors. May it always rest upon equally worthy shoulders.

What a remarkable history! What other school in the whole world can present the record of having run a completed century with one preceptor and three principals, and under two of the latter eighty-five years?

The world may ask for a statement of our record, whether the result in the past century has been sufficient to warrant its support and patronage in the future. I have prepared a brief and incomplete summary, in no instance exceeding the figures, and in most instances falling far short of the number in each division, owing to the want of data to make a perfect exhibit.

It appears that the whole number of pupils who have had their names entered upon the records is 5,278, of which number over 1,200 have been graduates of colleges, and upwards of 100 are now in colleges, not yet graduated. From this number we have had five Ministers Plenipotentiary to the courts of the most powerful and prominent nations, seven Cabinet ministers in the administration of our own government, eight Senators, and twenty Representatives in the Congress of the United States; twelve Governors of states, one Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, four Chief Justices of the Supreme Courts of states, sixteen Associate Justices of the Supreme Courts of states, four Justices of the Circuit Courts of the United States. Attorney-Generals of states, 3; presidents of colleges, 9; professors in colleges, 52; clergymen, 180; teachers, 245; attorneys at law, 510; physicians, 262; authors, 32; editors, 25; journalists, 20; eminent historians, 4; merchants, 260; captains in the mercantile marine, 33; major-generals in the army, 3; rear admirals in the navy, 2; and scores of officers in both departments of the service. In fact there is scarcely a branch of business which is not represented by men who received their early, and in many instances only education here. If any institution can show a better record, let it do so on its hundredth anniversary.

Some may ask for names. I will designate a few without classification. Lewis Cass, Daniel Webster, Leverett Saltonstall, Edward Everett, George Bancroft, Jared Sparks, John A. Dix, Joseph Stevens Buckminster, Joseph Greene Cogswell, John G. Palfrey, Gideon L. Soule, William B. O. Peabody, Francis Bowen, Alpheus Crosby, John P. Hale, Jeffries Wyman. In this short list we find the most accomplished diplomats, statesmen, divines, historians, authors, teachers, scholars, and legislators this country has known, whose names and fame reach beyond the limits of the republic, and are well known and honored in lands beyond the sea. Time forbids my going farther.

There has been but one purpose here, and that has been to establish the pupils firmly in the elementary principles of the languages taught and the sciences incorporated in the curriculum. With the foundation well laid and thoroughly understood, the future development is made easy. Manliness and self-reliance are taught and made conspicuous, both of which are of the utmost importance.

The work here is done without ostentation or unnecessary show. The school has stood in the front rank of the classical institutions of the country because it has been governed by one purpose, to thoroughly instruct the pupils in the branches taught.

Unnecessary, unimportant and harsh rules and regulations were never adopted for the government of the boys, but they were expected to maintain the dignified bearing of gentlemen, and bring honor to themselves and the school.

The institution has been conservative and at the same time progressive. It has never caught up the radical notions of the day, but has stood for a full, rounded and well developed education, symmetrical in every part, without cramping or narrowing one faculty for the benefit of the others. It is well known to the colleges and universities of the country, and its course has always received their approval and endorsement. In fact it has been large enough to establish a curriculum which the colleges have accepted, as it antedates most of them; and with such eminent instructors, a course of preparatory studies was arranged that met the requirements of any college.

I have alluded to the principals. I should be direlict to duty if I failed to mention some of those who have aided in the instruction and management of the Academy, to whom much of its prosperity and success is due. These principals have been supported by such distinguished scholars as Daniel Dana, Nicholas Emery, Samuel D. Parker, Joseph Stevens Buckminster, Ashur Ware, Francis Bowen, Ebenezer Adams, Hosea Hildreth, Alexander H. Everett, the Peabodys, Nathan Lord, James Walker, Joseph Gibson Hoyt, Paul A. Chadbourne, George A. Wentworth, Bradbury L. Cilley. Hosea Hildreth served as instructor fourteen years, Joseph G. Hoyt eighteen, George A. Wentworth twenty-five, and Bradbury L. Cilley, twenty-four years.

No school can fail when directed even in part by such men, and the standard of scholarship under such instruction cannot be low.

It was a fortunate circumstance that the Academy was located in this town, noted for the urbanity and culture of its citizens during its entire history. The influence of the men and women here has aided much in moulding the character of the boys who had the good fortune of their society.

Mr. President—the past is secure, the future of the institution is full of promise. Its past hundred years have been a marvelous success. It has had unbroken prosperity. It has done its full share in directing the rise and development of our common country. It has seen hundreds of colleges, and thousands of high schools and academies spring up all over the land, and many of them with princely endowments; still its members have steadily increased. It has never been jealous of the success of others, and has endeavored to build up all educational institutions and enterprises, rather than pull down. With such a record it starts off on its second century. We cannot foretell its work in the future, but judging from the past, which is our only safe criterion, we predict for it a prosperity and influence even greater and wider than in the past. It needs larger endowments and fuller equipment to keep abreast with the demand of the age, and we trust that those who have watched its history, and known of its work, will place in the hands of the corporation, which has always sacredly cared for the funds, such additional endowments as will bring corresponding prosperity and influence to our beloved alma mater.

Dr. Perkins said: There is another institution very much like this of ours, beyond the valley of the Merrimack. You know there are student contests which are apt to wax the warmest between brothers. Sometimes our boys, when they come face to face with the boys of Andover, have their interests excited a little more than they do at other times. It is not because they feel they are so far apart, but because they are so near together. We have the good fortune to have with us, this evening, the Principal of Phillips Academy at Andover, my college friend, whom I have known since my school days, and I take great pleasure in presenting to you at this time, Dr. Bancroft.

ADDRESS OF CECIL F. P. BANCROFT, PH. D.

It gives me great pleasure to take part in any celebration like this which commemorates the virtues and the deeds and the great worth of the Phillips family. Every student of Andover must take a profound interest in everything which in any way contributes to the better appreciation of what that family has done for the country and for the world. Wendell Phillips, in one of his speeches, speaking of the family, says "they have been at Andover, hence, elsewhere in America." I meet often, and always with a thrill of emotion, an esteemed friend and neighbor, Samuel Phillips, the son of Samuel Phillips, who was the son of Colonel John Phillips, who was the son of Lieutenant Governor Samuel Phillips, who was the son of the Hon. Samuel Phillips, one of the founders of the school at Andover, a brother of your Dr. John Phillips, who was the joint founder with his brother at Andover and sole founder here at Exeter; and he, in turn, was the son of the Rev. Samuel Phillips of Andover, who was the son of Mr. Samuel of Salem, who was the son of the Rev. Samuel of Rowley, who was the son of the Rev. George of Watertown, who came to this country in 1630 with Sir Richard Saltonstall, with Simon Bradstreet and Gov. John Winthrop, and was the peer of these great men. The institutions at Exeter and Andover are the result of the sagacity and the liberality of the same persons of the same family; they were planted in the same interests; they have labored on the same foundations. As I said, Dr. John Phillips, some years before the planting of this school, united with his elder brother in laying the foundations of the school at Andover. When Samuel Phillips died John Phillips became the president of the board of trustees. Although he gave the larger part of his fortune to this school, he was the contributor of the largest part of the quick capital of the school at Andover, his brother contributing lands and other properties for the founding of the Academy; and in his will he left a handsome legacy which has been employed ever since, for the most part, in sustaining students of limited means and of great promise.

The two institutions have, furthermore, been based upon the same chartered privileges, for the most part, although deriving their powers from different States. The principles enunciated in their charters are almost identical, whole paragraphs being copied from the one instrument into the other, the same idea prevailing, that learning and religion, that the teaching of young men how to live as they ought in the world, is the high end for which wealth should be employed, for which the country should aspire and through which alone the country can live. The same persons have often served on the boards of trustees of the two schools. There has been a marked conformity in respect to instruction. Dr. Abbot was fitted for college at Andover, Dr. Soule prepared himself in part for his work here by teaching school in the Andover Academy. Dr. Perkins was prepared for college, likewise, at Andover; and, in turn, three Principals of Phillips Andover Academy fitted for college at Exeter. There has been an interchange of teaching all along the line in other positions in the schools. There has been, furthermore, a generous rivalry in the work proposed by each of the schools and carried forward by each, each doing its own work. Only thirty miles apart, but never coming in collision, each rejoices in the prosperity of the other, each is helped by the prosperity of the other, so that every aid given to the school here is helpful to the school there, and every aid given to the school there is counted for a new foundation here. And I am pleased to hear that one of our own sons, one of your trustees, has signalized this celebration, as he did ours five years ago, by a gift of $25,000.*

But, I think, we cannot emphasize too much, on an occasion like this, the fact that the great work proposed for such a school as this goes forward upon the power of ideas rather than through the power of situation, of endowments, of those accessories which at times seem to us so dazzling and so necessary. Other schools are richer than this, other schools are older than this; can we find one better than this? There are some principles which, it seems to me, account for the great prestige and power of such a school as this. In the first place, it was not planned for a local interest; it was planned for mankind. It contemplated, not a local patronage, but it contemplated the world; and it contemplated not ordinary boys, but, throughout its deeds of trust and its acts of incorporation and the voluminous correspondence which we have, partly in print and largely in manuscript, it will be found that the founders of this school provided for youth of excelling genius, of remarkable abilities, of unusual promise. They never contemplated the rank and file; they always aspired to teach here the best minds that could be assembled, irrespective of those conditions which have prevailed elsewhere and which did prevail, perhaps, up to that very hour. The instruction here has been carried forward by the best men that could be commanded,—men the peers of the highest presidents and professors in the land, men of undoubted learning, men of undoubted zeal, men of undoubted capacity, men of singular devotion in the work of teaching.

*John C. Phillips, Esq., of Boston,

And, again, behind it all have been those lofty views of life and of duty, those roots of faith which have pervaded every endeavor on the part of those men whom we properly call the pious founders of the school; especially these lofty views of what it is to live, of what it is to labor for others, of what it is to support the state, what public spirit means, what learning is designed to answer in all its highest and noblest uses; so that no boy can come within the sphere of such ideas without receiving that first impulse towards generous culture, that outlook towards a future and towards others which sanctifies his every aim.

These schools are sometimes called the Etons and Winchester and the Rugbys and the Harrows of our land. I had the privilege, a few years ago, of catching a swift glimpse of those great schools, and I was impressed with three things: first, that the chapel was the center of English school life; second, that great foundations were necessary for the accomplishment of the highest ranges of educational work; and, third, that no school can permanently prosper which does not keep in view at every point the genius of the time, the requirements of the age in which it labors. And so you will find everywhere in these great schools religious faith, you will find the evidences of princely gifts, you will find new buildings, new laboratories, new appliances of the physical sciences and the modern languages coming up as time requires, and taking their places side by side with the old trinity of education. Is this the Eton of America? Oh, it will be when, in the ages, possibly the generations—if possible, let it be in the decades—to come, missions shall stand beneath these foundations, when the Principals of the Phillips Exeter Academy shall have the same consideration, enjoy the same emoluments and have the same commanding power as the Bishop of a Church, as the President of Harvard College, as the Senators whom we send to Congress, as the Governors of our states. The large foundations must come, the great ideas must be maintained, the gifts and graces which come from the teaching of God must be present to quicken and vivify the whole. Then with men, then with money, then with all this history, with all this precious past, there can be no doubt that this Academy shall be, indeed, the Eton of the land.

And now I come officially to bring you the salutations of eleven thousand pupils of 105 years, and to express the wish that this school may flourish forever.

Dr. Perkins said : There is one gentleman present with us this evening who enjoys a peculiar distinction. I think it belongs to no one else in the world. He was here, friends, a pupil under Mr. Wentworth and Mr. Cilley, and he has a son here under the same instructors. If I am wrong in the statement that this man is peculiar in that, I should like to be corrected ; otherwise I will call upon him to whom I have referred, Mr. Charles H. Pennypacker.

ADDRESS OF MR. CHARLES H. PENNYPACKER.

Mr. President, and Ladies and Gentlemen : I plead guilty to the rather embarrassing allusion made in my introduction upon this occasion ; but I may say in answer to it that this institution is at all times, and has been within my recollection, worthy of so atrocious a crime. I well remembered the circumstances under which I came to this place from the State of Pennsylvania ; I remembered distinctly the reception which I met, and, having these circumstances and that experience before my eyes and in my memory when I had a candidate to present for admission to an Academy in this country, I could think of no place more fitting than Exeter, New Hampshire. It was not only a place to educate the mind, not only a place for excellent mental discipline, but it also abounded in all those attributes of character which go to make up the gentleman. I remembered the teachings of Dr. Soule. They extended beyond the recitation room. They went out into the daily walks of the every-day life of the student in Exeter; and when he left here, be it to go to Pennsylvania, to any Southern state or any other state, he took with him such pleasant memories that he could not but be the better for having been here. Therefore it was that I presented my son to this institution, and I trust that neither the institution nor myself will ever regret the operation.

My friends, it has been said in your hearing that Exeter has done well in the past. Her history has been made; the record is before you. What shall we do in the present? What shall we do for the future? That is the problem which is now presented to us upon this anniversary. It makes no difference what may have been the glories of the past hundred years; if we do not keep abreast of the times, if we are not keenly alive to every new word and every new work, we will lag in this struggle and Exeter may, perchance, follow the example of some other institutions. Throughout the past twenty years, year by year, her Alumni have been increasing in number, and upon every glorious battle-field of our civil war, I might say, her sons have been found, either upon the one side or the other, and they battled none the less bravely because of their experience here; and in every relation of life, no matter what it may be, whether it be the law, whether it be divinity, whether it be the medical profession or whether it be the every-day business of life, they have shown themselves worthy of this training; and I trust, therefore, that we shall take fresh courage for the future, especially in the light of the experience that we have already heard, when the utterances of some seventy years have come down to us, when we find that good physical health has been at all times and under all circumstances upon the very best understanding with scholastic training. When we remember these things, we really think there is a good chance for the boys of Exeter.

Dr. Perkins said: I don't know how many of you are familiar with the town of Peterborough in New Hampshire, but I am sure it would be a pretty severe imputation on your general intelligence if I were to intimate you didn't know some of the honored sons of that town who have been here in this school. The names of the Smiths, and of the Morisons, and of the Holmeses, will occur to many of you. I now call on one of them to speak to us, the Hon. Nathaniel Holmes.

ADDRESS OF HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.

It is a pleasure for me to answer for my native town, which I see by your catalogue sent four students to this Academy in the second year of its foundation and in the first year after the peace of 1783, though I see at least one here present who might more fitly do it. My own recollections of Exeter go back to the old Academy of fifty years ago; with the new, living so far away for the most part, I have had no very near acquaintance. But my two years at Phillips Exeter Academy, from 1831 to 1833, remain quite fresh among the most agreeable memories of my life. I was soon initiated and sat down to hard study. There was for me some novelty in the old town. One of the things that first attracted my attention was the harbor, half water, half mud-flat, and that famous single schooner moored to its solitary wharf far down the ebbing tide. I believe I saw it again this blessed day. In fact, I had first arrived here three or four weeks before the term was to begin, and, having a strong desire to see the great ocean, I took the stage along the coast to Boston and had some glimpses of it, and thence found my way home on foot to the farm in Peterborough. My father set me to hauling mill-logs until the time came to start again. I began to think I might as well have staid in Exeter.

There is no need that I dwell on particulars known to many, if not all, here present. Of course, Dr. Benjamin Abbot was the Principal and had charge of the large Latin room. I see him again upon the wall, in his picture, natural as life, sitting there among the immortal. And George J. Abbot, and for some time Henry French, was monitor and wielded a beneficent authority over the younger men; and there was the Greek room under Prof. Soule; him, too, I see again upon the opposite wall sitting familiar among the worthies of the past; and the English room under Prof. Joseph H. Abbot. If memory serves me, some few for, whom digging at Greek roots and mathematics was rather tough work, perhaps, did sometimes have the audacity to speak of "Gid." Soule and "Joe." Abbot; but of the venerable Principal there was, I think, no abridgment of the entire reverence due to the majesty of his name and presence and his gracious manner. Then there was the hall above, where the young orators began, with fear and trembling, to learn the art of "winged words," and the mysterious "F. S. T." with its "Golden Branch," then (as I suppose it is still) the prime object of youthful ambition among all. An election into that fraternity was the first sign to the young hopeful that the vague wandering of his uncertain ark on a wide sea of troubles was at length nearing land. Such as had a strong predilection for future greatness could now and then slip into the Court House, near by, and listen to the eloquence of George Sullivan, Ichabod Bartlett, the elder Atherton and Mark Farley. The still small voice of the Rev. Mr. Hurd spoke the words of wisdom in the little church adjoining; he was an elegant speaker, but his doctrine was for me, even at that day, a little too orthodox to carry my whole sympathies with him.

I sometimes think that the whole of education consists in learning to read and write and cipher; but most of us have to learn, as years advance, that, at this day of the world, to read means to know the language of all the sciences and about one-half the tongues of all the earth, living and dead; that to write means to write books that will pay or will live—he is a rare man whose books will both pay and live—and to cipher—it might dizzy the arithmetic of memory to say what, short of the entire geometry of the heavens and the earth.

It is said we live in an age of transition—transition into what? into science and the unknowable? into agnosticism?—this last seems to me to be a new classical substitute for the plain old Anglo-Saxon term “knownothingism”—into Pantheism, perhaps, or (as Carlyle preferred to call it) Pottheism; and what this may mean I never found anybody that knew or could define. For my part, as yet I see no end to knowledge or the capacity of the human mind for learning and knowing. Indeed, it is one of the wonders of our time (as it seems to me) that the most advanced science finds itself, nolens volens, penetrating into a purely metaphysical realm, approaching, as it were, the judicial palace of the Supreme Thought, not, indeed, by the direct high road of pure reason and the front gate, but through the by-ways and back-alleys, the narrow passages, “the crannies and offices of man,” groping darkly for an entrance by the back door. If neither Aristotle nor Kant nor Hegel has given us a perfect theory of the universe, God, nature and man inclusive, why then it simply remains for somebody else to do it better. “Attempt it not!” exclaims Thomas Carlyle. But we may rest assured that there will be no ceasing of the attempt until the thing is done. For myself I am much inclined to say, with Bacon and King Solomon of old, "That it is the wisdom of God to conceal the mysteries of the universe as in innocent play with children, and the glory of man to find them out."

Dr. Perkins said: If you will look over the names on our general catalogue from 1840 to 1850, you will pause very often to dwell on familiar names,—names that have become distinguished for service done in the various professions or in business. Upon a gentleman bearing one of such names I shall now call,—the Rev. Augustus Woodbury, of Providence, Rhode Island.

ADDRESS OF REV. AUGUSTUS WOODBURY.

Gentlemen of the Alumni, Ladies and Gentlemen: It has always been a source of regret to me that I never have had any sons to send to this Academy to follow in the footsteps of their father; and the remarks of our friend from Pennsylvania have added another pang to these feelings of regret. When we look back upon the past and take account of what has been done, and look forward to the future with hope, believing that there are still greater things to come from this institution, it certainly seems to go without saying that we congratulate ourselves and congratulate each other that we have reached this hundredth anniversary. We are glad that we have lived to see this day. It is an occasion for recalling the associations of the past, for gathering up the scattered threads of friendships to weave a new bond of union; to bid each other "God Speed" as we separate, never, perhaps, to meet again on this side of the grave, remembering our obligations to those who have so faithfully instructed us, and making it our ambition to be worthy of their instruction. As our venerable friend who has just taken his seat has said, and I take it is the expression of the sentiment of all of you here present, to me, at least, it is,—that among the pleasantest of the past days of my life were the days I spent in Exeter. We had our rivalries, our contests, our struggles with each other, but we had our enjoyments and our satisfactions. And it is a delight, now, to recall both of these, for, in these boyhood's experiences, we may well believe that all things work together for good, if they are rightly taken and rightly used. The character of a school depends, of course, upon the character of its students, the character of the Alumni whom it sends forth, the character of its instructors and the character of its instruction. The students, I apprehend, will speak for themselves, as they have already spoken. It would not become me to speak of the character of the Alumni. We have had a long list of distinguished men who have received their preparatory training in this school; but, of the character of the instruction and of the character of the instructors I can well speak for a single moment. I came to Exeter about six years after Dr. Abbot had ceased to be Principal, but his venerable form was still a familiar object upon the streets. And I remember how kind and courteous he always was to the students, and how bright the day seemed to us after we had received his passing salutation. Mr. Soule was Principal. He was assisted by Messrs. Hoyt and Swan, and the obligation which I, in common with all who came under their instruction owed to those faithful men, can never be cancelled. Mr. Soule, indeed, was the object of our veneration; Mr. Hoyt was the object of our love. I think I may safely say that I have never known any man before or since his time who was able to engage so closely to himself the affections of his pupils, and any one who so fully secured their complete esteem. It was my good fortune to know him quite intimately in after life, after I had left the school ; he was at my home and I was at his.

And, as for the character of the instruction, it was not simply a place for preparatory training—and I think, in that regard, it was incomparable,—but it was also a place for the discipline of manners, of morals and of character. In my day, and I think it is true of the present day, Exeter was no place for a lazy boy or a selfish boy, or a boy with low ambitions, or a boy of vulgar disposition ; and if any boy of that character happened to find himself here, he also found it necessary either to correct his habits or to take himself away. There was this discipline which has shown itself in the years that followed after. And I think at that time, too,—and I presume they do now,—the instructors had a very happy method of taking the nonsense out of a boy. Boys, as you all know, and men too, for that matter, sometimes have a certain feeling of self-assurance and self-conceit ; but I think that the admonitions that were received by us at that time,—I do not intend to give myself away,—the admonitions that were received by us at that time, were very effectual in making us at least more modest than we should have been without them. And I have often wished, when I have seen boys at public exhibitions, and even men at public exhibitions, that they might have received some such discipline as I received in my boyhood.

And, speaking of these exhibitions, it was the custom then not to have an exhibition very often. They had not then come into vogue. Nowadays, scarcely a primary school can finish its term without having a questionable exercise of this kind ; but, in those days, public exhibitions were somewhat rare, and their rarity gave them a certain glory. It was the custom then,—it was in the old Academy,—for the young of the town to do their part in decorating the walls, and ladies it was a labor, I think, of two or three weeks. It was the duty of those boys who took part in the exhibition, to invite certain young ladies from the town, and to see that they were escorted to the place and escorted home again. I confess that it was with some misgiving as to whether it would be consistent or not with allegiance to the girls we left behind us, but we tried to do that duty as we tried to do all our other duties in the best way we could. And I have no doubt that from those happy occasions have resulted some of the unions in after life which have been so fruitful of blessings and happiness.

And, then, the Golden Branch, to which Judge Holmes has referred. I scarcely know what to say about that; the contests we had there, the debates that we engaged in, the electioneering that went on, the canvassing for office that began as soon as the presiding officer's term had begun, and continued through his term in order to prepare for his successor. Now, Mr. President and gentlemen, I have known something of political canvasses in New Hampshire, when the "Independent Democrat" was alive and was contesting with the "New Hampshire Patriot" for the political supremacy of this state, and I have known something of political canvassing in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, but I confess that I have never gone through a political canvass since that time which was equal to those which we had in the old room at the east end of the old Academy. Governor Prescott has given us the names of a long list of those statesmen and governors, senators and representatives, etc., and I have no doubt their success in politics has been due to their experience in the Golden Branch. I sometimes wonder whether our fellow alumnus, Gov. Butler, was not a member of the Golden Branch. On one of those particular occasions, I recollect it now, though I have not thought of the matter from that time, scarcely, till this, a very serious question was in dispute. It was impossible for us to settle it; it went on for several weeks, when the thought occurred to me that possibly the member of Congress from the district to which I belonged might help us. And, so, in my boyish innocence, I sat down and wrote a letter to him, stating the question and asking him to give us his counsel. He helped us very courteously indeed. He acknowledged the receipt of the note, he expressed his interest in the question which we were discussing, and he concluded with quoting these lines of Virgil :

“Non nostrum inter vos tantas componere lites.”

I should think not! Experienced politician as he was, having long parliamentary practice in Congress, it was altogether too much for him. And I defy any man to have settled the questions which came up in those days in the Golden Branch.

But I must not indulge, Mr. President. My time was limited to ten minutes, and I presume it has about expired. It has seemed to me sometimes in thinking of this institution and how much those who have had the benefit of her instructions have loved her, how she has been the object of their affections from the moment they set foot across her threshold, as students and Alumni of this Academy,—it has seemed to me like the case of the old Hebrews, who, wherever they went, however far away from their native land they wandered, carried in their hearts the affection for their sacred city. They made their annual visits for the purpose of laying on its shrine their offerings. They came back from journeyings to rebuild the temple of their adoration; they thought of it by day, they dreamed of it by night, and when they prayed they opened their windows towards Jerusalem. The Alumni of Phillips Exeter Academy carry the institution with them wherever they may go, however far they may wander.

Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see
My heart untravelled fondly turns to thee.

They come here to make their offerings; and when the old Academy was burned, by their liberal contributions and willing gifts they built this elegant and commodious edifice, and so they carry in their hearts, from the beginning unto the end, the interest of this sacred shrine of their youth. And everyone of us, I think, would repeat the fervent and impassioned words of the Hebrew Psalmist, "if I forget thee, oh, Alma Mater of my youth, let my right hand forget her cunning; if I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth."

Dr. Perkins said: I fancy that when we come to examine the register that will be laid before the Alumni to-morrow for their signatures, we shall find that the number of visitors here who have been in the school since 1870 will be greater than the number of all others. I shall call now upon our last speaker, who will represent these younger men, the Rev. Richard Montague, of Providence, Rhode Island.

ADDRESS OF REV. RICHARD MONTAGUE.

Mr. President: Unless my memory fails me there was, when I was here twelve years ago, a rule somewhat to this effect, the repeal of which I have never learned: That students who were living in private families must dwell in families that are authorized to board them by the Faculty of the school; and that if the families in which they were dwelling should chance, at any time, to notice that they were out after ten o'clock, they should forfeit all other privileges. Having been assigned to most estimable hosts this day by the authorities of this honored institution, and noticing that I am out beyond the regular time, and, fearing that they, perhaps, may be getting a little anxious, I think a mere word is all that a representative of the younger graduates may be expected to utter. In fact I am reminded of the story of the boy who with his brother, was expected by his pious father regularly, every morning, before he could go out to play, to repeat a passage of Scripture. And he was extremely anxious every morning to play, so that he managed nearly every time to repeat the required verse from Scripture. But, one morning, when he was especially eager to get out, having overheard his brother say that "he would rather be a door keeper in the house of the Lord than to sit in the tents of wickedness forever," he simply said to his father, "so say I," and was off. After all these words of congratulation on the honorable history of our honored Academy, might it not be enough for me if I should simply add, "so say I?" But, yet, perhaps, those of my associates who are here, if no others, would expect a single word of testimony touching what this Academy has done for us. It was my privilege to be here but a year, and yet, in that year I think two lessons were very powerful on me. We young men are governed by our ideals, and our future and our usefulness in the world depend upon the character of the ideals which inspire and move us. I received two ideals touching scholarship and life work in general which are summed up in two words,—thoroughness and persistence. As I look down into the faces of some of my honored instructors who were here then and are still working in this institution, there comes back to me most vividly the meaning of the word thoroughness. I never dared face my Greek Professor, great as was his kindness and encouraging as were his manner and his words, unless I had the thorough mastery of the passage of Greek in hand. And I hardly need to add that I didn't dare to go to the board to put on a theorem in Geometry unless I knew what I was about. For myself, I am very thankful for that lesson. It is an ideal that is worth years of striving to get.

The other ideal that impressed me strongly was the necessity of persistence in work. I don't know of anything that could illustrate it better, in my recollections of my life here, than this one instance. New England, so far as I recollect, has not been very much troubled with earthquakes ; but, in the days of the old Academy Hall, in '71, we did have a little earthquake in Exeter. We were reciting at the time to Dr. Soule, of precious memory, and suddenly there came a movement altogether strange and indescribable. It seemed as if the floor was going up ; it seemed as if the supporting columns in the hall were going to fall ; it seemed as though the roof would be lifted away from us, and we were, as it were, tossed in a ship by the waves. We knew not what was going to happen next. The Doctor stood it better than we did, but, at last, even he rose from his seat and looked out of the window. Then he saw that Abbot Hall was still standing and the trees were growing as they had been growing the day before, and, resuming his seat, he said calmly, "Foster, construe that next sentence." I have ever felt since, that no matter what earthquakes of opposition might assail the purpose, or what temptation to the pleasures of ease might allure, our motto should be persistent application to the work in hand. And that seems to me a lesson which it was well worth learning.

I can fancy that these honored teachers who have been so influential upon the characters and lives of the hundreds of students who have gone out from this Academy, and who have gone out from this world to their better rest, may in their older days have found much pleasure by turning over the old catalogues of the students whom they used to teach. It seems to me that if the aged parent can delight in recalling the careers of his children now in the prime of life and in enthusiastic work in the world, so the teacher, who has perhaps laid aside his active work and who is now in the declining years of his life, can have great pleasure in tracing the history of his successful pupils.

I don't see that the Professors who are here now and who were here when I was, are one day older than they were twelve years ago. But, I suppose sometime, if the world only lasts long enough, they will be a little older, and, if they ever should be, it strikes me that it would be an exceeding great pleasure to them could they look over the record of us younger men and be able to say, honestly, "they have done good work in the world ;" and, if we have done good work in the world, I am sure they can each say honestly, "that work was largely done through my instruction, through my inspiring influence, through the ideals that I implanted in their young minds." May every one of us younger graduates, give them the opportunity to say it truthfully.

Dr. Perkins said: Now, with the very strongest wishes for a good bright day to-morrow, we will separate.

THURSDAY FORENOON.

The exercises were continued at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon of Thursday, June 21, when the Centennial Oration and Poem were delivered in the presence of an audience that filled the great tent in the common opposite the Academy.

CENTENNIAL ORATION BY REV. HORATIO STEBBINS, D. D.

Mr. Bancroft, Gentlemen of the Board of Trustees and Friends of the Academy: Wherever on the earth stand the monuments of human struggle, self-sacrifice and devotion, there it is good for the living, as they move forward in the ever-flowing procession of generations, to pause in their march and pay venerating respect, gratitude and admiration:—a hundred years of the Academy justify the occasion.

We pay distinguished honors to the Founder, whose benefactions have trimmed the lamp of learning here and sent its mild and steady beams afar; we cherish grateful regards for all those who have, by word or deed or fostering care, strengthened the foundations of the Academy, reared its walls anew, or as masters of the mind have ministered to its intellectual and moral life, and sent its influence abroad wide as the beams of the sun. We confess our debt to an institution which has a vested earthly immortality in the mind of man, and on which time and death cast no contempt!

The rise and development of institutions, of whatever name, are the rational and intelligent expression of man's individual helplessness, attesting that he has, and can have, no isolated completeness or perfection. No creature receives so great benefits from his kind as man, or is so dependent on his kind. The horse or the dog, withdrawn from his fellows of the species, shows no perceptible depreciation, and fills out the figure of his being. If brought in contact with man, the animal surpasses his companions of the tribe, and by his dependence wins a better destiny than is vouchsafed to him through communion with his own race. But man thus withdrawn is an arrested development, a frost-bitten infancy, in which even the opening buds of speech are cut down. It is a profound saying of Spinoza that "Nothing is more useful to man than his fellow man; no more excellent way can be desired by men for the preservation of their being, than a concord of all men in all things, such that the minds and bodies of all make up, as it were, one mind, and one body, and that all together strive to the utmost of their power to preserve their being, and all seek together the common good of all."

This union and dependence of men is through identity of nature and the diffusion of that Almighty Spirit which is the inspiration of all. Human society is of the nature of an endowment, a perpetual fund, from which every man receives benefits that he cannot acquire for himself. Herein is the power of social order, civilization and history. This makes laws, manners, and religions, and that continuity of thought and action we call the life of the race. If the animals were thus united, if they were as dependent on one another and capable of such a common bond of good, they could drive out man from the earth, and hold the world. But having no such dependence, and no such power of mutual help, divine order, a common mind, a public opinion are impossible. The great outward social fact, expressing the unity and oneness of man's inner nature, is, that society does more for every man than he can pay for, secures to him the great privileges and immunities of existence, so that whether he will or no he has nothing that he has not received. There is no money that a man gets so much for as he does for his taxes, and when he has paid all his bills, they do not cover the full cost of all that he has had. Nor is this the result of a mutual partnership where every man pays his own share, but it is the very condition and nature of man in society that bear these fruits as a tree bears apples or a vine bears grapes. There is an inherent tendency of beneficence in things human, and man by the fact of his nature and his association with his fellows on the plain of that nature, receives great and enduring good, the foregleams of his destiny. This tendency is the key-note of all good in the world of men and things, and all man's active beneficence and public spirit, and a hint taken from the great human theme, to augment and glorify man's estate. Thus all the good that adorns the earth, the charities and humanities of the human world, "out from the heart of Nature rolled."

The distinguished and supreme expression of the mutual dependence and helpfulness of men is in Education; and perhaps the most adequate conception of human life and human society is that in which they are represented as a school. It was the vital power of that thought which made Lessing's little pamphlet, The Education of the Human Race, one of the most fruitful seeds that was ever cast upon the furrows of the world. For this reason the founders of great schools are justly regarded as the benefactors of mankind. Anticipating man's destiny, hastening to proclaim it, believing in their fellow men of unborn generations, having, it may be, honorable desires for posthumous fame and corporate immortality, or inspired with reverent passion to promote the great Intent, they have established perpetual fountains of living waters in the eternal heights of the mind. They have recognized the unity and identity of human nature, and that, "through the ages one increasing purpose runs," and, for the promotion of that "purpose," they have set enduring privileges and opportunities, to be enjoyed with no sense of debt, but gratitude—that happy debt from which the noble mind would never be discharged, as the wise receive the benefactions of the common world. The world is a school, with endowments so opulent, and privileges so great that no man can fully discharge his obligation; and a school is a little world founded on the same plan. The historic fact illustrates the great principle, that education cherished either in great founded schools, or by illustrious public opinion, recognizes the essential value of man's intellectual and moral nature, and of his dependence on his fellow men for the development of that nature. Christianity was the embodiment of the great principle, and lent its humanizing power to promote it. Charlemagne, the genius of the middle age, conceived of education as the foster child of religion; and the founders of the Republic identified it with the welfare of the State, whose existence was justified by its sympathy with the nature and destiny of man.

If human experience has taught anything, if man in action has displayed the wants and tendencies of his own being, this is manifest: that all his higher interest must be provided for, and the nobler his nature the more he wants. The supply of his highest wants requires vast resources, sustained by constant care, and continually refreshed by new accessions of living power. In whatever domain the laissez faire theory may be true, it is not true when we come to man as man, in his highest relations. Man cannot be let alone or left to chance. Great provisions must be made for him: not to guard him as a child and perpetuate his feebleness, but to inspire him, as a free, self-directing, responsible being. For this, individuals, touched with exalted enthusiasm of human good, while as yet an infinitely small portion of humanity discern it, establish their estates in eternal foundations, and prophetic statesmen strike the rock of public opinion, and it pours out rivers of water! This is our expression of that supreme bond, that binds man to man, and man to God.

One of the noblest objects of human contemplation, is a man of great motives, looking upon the world with steady, strong wisdom and pure feeling, devoted to the supreme purpose of human good. Standing in the calm inaccessible heights of moral greatness, the passions of the hour do not disturb him. The weakness, the ignorance, the folly, the pride, the ingratitude of men, lie beneath his feet as clouds beneath some sunlit mountain glory. He believes in himself, and in the world, and in the Maker, because he walks and sees in eternal light. He has such a sense of the grandness of human things, that humility and gratitude move his breast. If he has great material powers, he is beset continually with the thoughtlessness of the public and the ingratitude of states. And there are those around him who speak contemptuously of the public, and blaspheme that human society whose foundations are the ever-proceeding spirit of God. But the consummate man, of great purposes of good, understands the prejudices and passions of the hour, and sees and feels and knows that the good he proposes is perpetual, and will stand above these at length, as the sun in his mid-day splendor stands above the morning mists that hung around his rising. Always great in his moral consciousness, he is not defeated by indifference or neglect, but confident that good can never be lost, he entrusts it to his fellow men and the generations that come after him.

Such a man, from the scanty records preserved of him, was our Founder, John Phillips. Early in the history of the country, while yet this Commonwealth of New Hampshire lay upon the borders of the wilderness, amidst narrow and provincial views, hemmed in by sharp necessity to a frugality which, however friendly it might be to the severer virtues, gave little opportunity to expansive sympathies, our Founder conceived a plan of enduring good on principles so vital, yet so liberal, that no collision has arisen in a hundred years between the stipulations of his bequests and the rising intelligence and changing forms of the modern age! And if no collision for a hundred years, then none forever.

I am not anxious to prove him no wiser than he knew. I cheerfully accord him a place among those noble minds that have been the instruments of ideas above themselves. There are two things, however, pertaining to common sense and right reason, that a wise man of material and moral power must consider if he would do well. He must ask himself: What can I do that will supply a perpetual human want? And how can I do it so that it will be adapted, or will adapt itself to the changing circumstances of society and men? Here truth culminates in paradox, and all things truly great and permanent are mutable. That which admits no change may exist, but it cannot be said to live. All great principles set forth in idea or purpose ever enter into new combinations and bear fresh fruits. The enlightened Founder of institutions must be without caprice, or whim, believing in the present order of things, but believing in it as no finality, and not mistaking his self-will for his last will and testament. I applaud the name and memory of our Founder, a man of simple tastes and simple habits, who, trained to theology when theology cherished that zeal which is peculiar to narrowness of view, was too modest to become a teacher of religion, and devoting himself to the palaver of a country trader, thus gathered an honest fortune which he set apart as the perpetual foundation of a great school, with magnanimity of thought and feeling, under which the Academy has been adapted to the ever wider circles of thought and intelligence, as naturally as corn grows or lilies bloom. I applaud him for that simplicity of mind and purpose, which, whether consciously or unconsciously, led him to establish this foundation not for this or for that, but for the mind and heart of man! The restriction which confides the administration of the trust and the instruction of the Academy to Protestants, cannot be considered an invidious distinction against that branch of the Christian church which from high ecclesiastical motives as the custodian of truth, enrolls the modern methods of education upon its syllabus of errors.

Our school, founded on so enlightened principles, for the cultivation of those studies which were included in the general scheme of a liberal education a century ago, has expanded, under the fostering care of wise and good men in the administration of its affairs, and of a line of distinguished masters and teacher, by natural impulse within, with the awakened and ever widening sympathies of learning.

Although vague generalizations are to be avoided, it may be said with propriety, that the present is a period of transition in education; and there are some who say that it is more than this, a period of intellectual and moral transition, in which the general field of human life and experience is transferred from the literary to the scientific side. Without assenting to such a view as the final result of the modern spirit, the area of education has been vastly increased within the last half century, and the relative rank of the subjects of education has been modified, at least to the extent of recognizing individual aptitudes, and no longer requiring all to adopt the same methods as the only instruments of culture or learning.

There is an opinion held by educational men, and widely diffused among those who claim to have only a common sense view of the subject, that what are called liberal studies are not well adapted to the practical duties and industries of life. The opinion has given a new impulse to what is called technical or professional education, in distinction from that general discipline, the object of which is knowledge and mental power. New subjects have been enrolled on the lists of education, and natural science, which has conquered new empires in these modern years, has opened fields of industry that were unknown to former generations, and given to the common vocations of men the intellectual rank of special professions. The more man knows of the world around him the more it responds to his intelligence, and the mind in things replies to the mind in man. It is not within the scope of this occasion to discuss the relative value of studies, either as a means of culture in its widest sense, or as a preparation for special vocation. It is only necessary to keep in view the distinction between liberal education and professional education. The test of the one is the discipline of the man, putting him in the widest relations with humanity as a general preparation for life in whatever sphere he may be called to act. The test of the other is an immediate special utility. The first may not be ascetic or unpractical: the second may not be indifferent to utility of the highest kind. For all general purposes this broad distinction is sufficient to give us an idea of the place the Academy holds in relation to the spirit of the time.

There has been a great impulse given to popular education throughout the country in the lifetime of the present generation. It is forever honorable to the sagacity and sincerity of the founders of the Republic that they associated the common school with the welfare of the state. The civilization of our era moving westward across the continent, has borne the mighty theme aloft, like a song of victory, to the shores of the other ocean; and it may be said with the sobriety of history that the education of New England, and the civil law of New York have become the public opinion of the country. The idea of a nation of men voluntarily taxing themselves in the round sum of a hundred millions of dollars per annum for education, that all may have a little, inspires admiration and respect. There are those, however, who believe that the common school system of the country is a failure. I do not belong to that class. Their opinions, it seems to me, are formed on principles of touchy æsthetics, rather than on fine intellectual and moral sympathies. The common school may be mechanical, and it may be a coarse machine, and the education it gives very crude. It does not accomplish what it ought to accomplish. But in this respect it does not differ from free institutions in general, laws, manners and religion. The common school is no more a failure than popular liberty, constitutional law, or the Christian religion are failures. It seems to be one of the unavoidable conditions of all human things that good does not do as much good as we sometimes think it ought to do. While this may seem discouraging to those inclined to take melancholy views of human affairs, to others, cheered by a mightier hope, it may suggest that our earthly horizons are not wide enough for the longer levers of the divine intent to swing in. The truth is, a people are educated by having the care of education, and by being interested in it.

We do not teach an ox to browse by tying him up in the stall. Good comes only by seizing the instrumentalities through which it comes. A few years ago I was travelling in the mountains and valleys of the western coast, when I came to a place, which after the manner of new countries, was called a city, to distinguish it from the wilderness. While resting there by the wayside, talking with a man who represented the local intelligence and spirit, two riders came up in half Spanish saddles, broad brimmed hats, shirt sleeves and outside boots, and their faces had a fine bronze that does not belong to academic groves. They had come in from a distance to talk with the local citizen there, about the schoolhouse and the school which they were going to establish in the borders of the woods. Their business done, the intelligence and counsel which they needed got, they sprang into their saddles and were off. As they went, I remarked to the sensible man whose advice they had sought: How these men are educated by having the care of education! The little shanty stands there, not a poetic building, but like other simple things in human life, it cannot be seen truly unless poetically. There from a few homes, inspired by the common affections of human nature, widely separated in a yet wild and unsubdued country, a dozen or twenty children frugally but neatly clad, find their way, plucking gentle daisies and flaming eschscholtzias as they go, as a tribute of childhood feeling to the teacher whose gentle manners have won their love! Those sunburnt riders understand and appreciate education far better than the bishops at the council of Nicæa understood and appreciated the Christian religion.

There is an idea of education in the general mind of the country, crude, vague and dim it may be, like a universe yet in nebulous mist, but an idea that amounts almost to a religion. The public opinion which provides even the most elementary education for all, however short it may come of the fulfilment of its idea, is a pledge and promise of unspeakable good. It is the acknowledgment of a great human bond arising in identity of nature and destiny. This public opinion has received a great impulse from the rapid development of the arts of life, demanding schools of special discipline and knowledge. There is an increasing conviction that let whoever will sow the seed, intelligence will reap the harvest. And there is a deeper conviction in noble minds, strong as the "ground swell" of the sea or the momentum of a planet, compared with which all other opinions are the temporary accidents of time and circumstance, that the true ground and justification of education, is the man himself, his nature and being. The ultimate reason of all human discipline is the worth and grandeur of intellectual and moral being. On any other ground our senses are a brood of chattering apes, and the brilliant utilities of our modern civilization are a "scouring of barbarian pots and kettles."

It is claimed by some that public education supported by the State should include the whole field of human studies from the grammar school to the university. It was a favorite idea of Channing that the public lands should be set apart for the education of the people. The public has not proved itself thus far a very safe trustee of school funds. States and cities in the Union that have been endowed with more than regal splendor have squandered or lost their patrimony. The act of Congress of 1862, giving to the States a vast domain, afforded a new opportunity to establish what is called "the higher education" under the care of the State. The brilliant imagination of the illustrious founder of English polemical idealism has been fulfilled, and the name of Berkeley has been given to the site of a modern State University, that fronts the western ocean. There has also been a movement in some quarters to establish a National University, to be sustained by the General Government as the crown of the public school system of the country.

The general interest in education, vague, dark, groping though it may be, a wise man will interpret as the first and indispensable condition of all moral and intellectual supply, a consciousness of want. The misery of ignorance is, that it wants nothing. The man who would be a benefactor of learning, or the institution that would have an honorable rank and influence, must discern and seize this tendency of the time.

For all practical purposes it may be said that opinion is divided in regard to the higher education, whether it shall be entrusted to the State or to the institutions founded by private munificence. The question naturally settles itself. There is some confusion in the common mind concerning what constitutes the higher education, of which we hear so much. That education only which looks upon man imaginatively, kindles his mental power, inspires his reason, and binds his will in the happy freedom of self-control can be called the higher education. It may not be technical or professional, but human. It may not be unpractical but it must be ideal. The truth that fronts the sun, undazzled in that insufferable light, is, that man is greater than anything he does, and treating him prosaically and practically only, is like applying the surveyor's chain to sunrise, or undertaking to find the square acres of the beauty of the world! But the State, as State, can regard education chiefly from the point of utility. A high and noble utility it may be, but a utility that must fall short of the grandeur of intellectual and moral being. The higher education transcends state reasons. Naturally the question settles itself, and the technical or professional education falls into the hands of the commonwealth, and liberal education is committed to institutions founded, not for State but human reasons.

The spirit of the Academy then is that of wide and true sympathy with the progress of the time. As a preparatory school it anticipates the ever-enlarging area of human studies, and chooses such as have not only utility, but fitness also for the purpose of education. Any subject worthy to be made a part of the education of the young must be such as a lad can master, and by mastering feed that hungering power of attention which constitutes the difference between a mental treadmill and mental activity. The subjects of science should be within the reach of thought and observation, without prolonged or abstruse experiment. Literature and history should be presented as the temple of the world, in the vestibule of which a youth may stand with uncovered head. And Language, that "Manual of Humanity" should be adorned and enlarged, as no other study is capable of being, by comment and illustration, until the dry paradigm buds and blooms, the dwelling-place of memory and imagination. These are the views and the subjects of education which should engage the care and attention of a great founded school; not ascetic and regardless of the useful, neither practical nor professional to the exclusion of the ideal.

To this end, great funds established in former generations, and cherished and strengthened by living men in succeeding time, should be administered not secretly as a private trust with which nobody has any business, but with wise regard to the right of society to know something of that in which it is most deeply interested, and which was dedicated to human good. Endowments demand perpetual vigilance not only for their protection, but for their use and adaptation to changing wants. Funds incapable of being adapted to the new circumstances of new generations, are a public nuisance.

In a great school, a community of youth, the subject of discipline must always be one of supreme importance. It is a subject, too, which the public, and especially parents, ought to understand. It is commonly supposed that a youth on leaving home for school or college encounters peculiar temptations and exposures. It may be reasonably doubted, however, whether he encounters any greater trials than he would anywhere else. Leaving home is a crisis always: the momentous crisis of freedom, responsibility and self-control. Parents should understand the general fact, and lay it well to heart, that a youth carries with him the tone of thought, feeling and manners that he has imbibed in his father's house, and that school and college are entitled to some allowance on that account. The temptations of a community of studies are not more severe for youth than the temptations of the general world of affairs. The guarantee of conduct is industry, and the wisest discipline is that which encourages industry, and associates it indissolubly with all noble learning. Regulations that cannot be enforced are worse than none; and take care lest you incur the folly of undertaking to decide when a boy becomes a young man.

It is affirmed by some, that the increasing wealth of the country tends to make our great schools the resort of much idleness, extravagance and luxury. It is a subject about which there is doubtless much vague impression, and more vague exaggeration. But it is true that idle and expensive habits brought from home are a bad influence in a place of learning, introducing an element of difficulty into the discipline, and setting up a standard of social superiority, where the only true tests are manliness of character and an earnest mind. There can be no doubt that it is the duty of a great funded school, to crowd the vices of self-indulgent extravagance into narrow quarters, to give them no standing, and to curtail

- their baleful influence by giving all its moral force in favor of simple manners, industrious scholarship, and upright manhood. A great funded school, established by the wise and good, while it makes no discrimination and allows no standards but character and mind, should ever be the friend of the poor; and on any other ground it has no right to be. It has been said that next to a good man in adversity, the object most pleasing to heaven is a good man successful in a great cause. That profound wisdom might be paraphrased and applied to youth in the pursuit of noble studies. If there is an object that kindles our admiration and inspires our love, it is a youth born into hard necessity, his mind warmed by the gentle heat that hatched the world, imagination tinging his morning horizon, and who never dreams that he is poor so happy is he in the wealth of his unworn heart. If there is another object of intellectual and moral beauty that wins and fixes our admiring regards, it is a youth nurtured in affluence, surrounded by the temptations of self indulgent ease, but chastened and admonished by wise paternal counsels and example, rising above the allurements of sense, the sight of the eyes and the pride of life, and finding in industry, in intellectual labors and accomplishments, the field of true honor, and the moral dignity of self-respect! It is one glory of the Academy that it has done something to diffuse such impressions of true human worth among men.

My own conviction is, that an important and indispensable element in the administration of a great school, is the personal influence of masters and teachers. Presence, bearing, insight, character, sympathy, are the invisible, indefinable powers of intellectual and moral guidance. A mind that has great influence, must, like the sun, send out rays of light, and rays of heat, and there must be atmosphere to diffuse them. This light and heat and atmosphere are as essential to the intellectual and moral world, as they are to mountain, meadow or sea. The consummate master of youth supplies in himself many of the restraints and protections of home, and his mind is like a climate upon a landscape.

The Academy has been singularly happy in a distinguished line of Masters, and in the influence they had on the minds of succeeding generations. The late Gideon L. Soule is impressed upon my mind and memory, as the eminent figure and representative of a great Master and Teacher of youth. When I sat in these seats, I formed a youthful opinion of him, as one of the best teachers of the Greek and Latin Classics, that American scholarship had produced. My mature judgment confirms the boyhood opinion. His gifts and acquirements as a Master, were not less distinguished, than those that belonged to him as a Teacher. Nature had endowed him with a noble frame, the most felicitous expression of the dignity and courtesy that were in him. As he walked across the Campus, or stood erect, or sat in his seat in the class room, he was a model of refinement and of that repose that belongs to strength. Never have I seen a man who could so see into and see through a youth! What penetration! What genial sagacity! What sympathy! What dark rebuke! What wise reproof! What cheerful encouragement! He multiplied his influence as in the miracle of the loaves and the fishes, and while there was enough for all, what he had left was more than he had at the beginning, for he grew wiser and better every day! Coming from afar and standing here again at this distance of time I lay upon his grave this tribute of an indebted mind!

Gentlemen of the Board of Trustees: The occasion is propitious! The sons of the Academy sent out over all the earth, return to pay revering honors; and hovering gratuities from afar flutter gently down to rest at her feet! Heaven, in appointing you to this care and duty, has made you the instruments of Almighty Wisdom and Purpose to raise Human Society to moral beauty and glory! May the purpose of Heaven be fulfilled in you, and under your care may the Academy still diffuse its blessings upon the human world !

Distinguished guests and friends of learning, whose presence here attests the universal sympathies of the mind, will please to receive our salutations !

Mr. Bancroft : I assume not too much, but voice a sentiment of all hearts, when in the name of this great concourse, I offer you their sincere, revering and grateful regards !

POEM BY EDWARD HALE, A. B.

A happy time !—these years that bear
 The nineteenth century toward its close—
 A happy time ! and happy those
 Who in its blessings have their share.
 For when before, within our ken,
 Did eager progress, and research
 In all things new, such homage pay
 To all things old ? and when did men
 With minds more worn in reason's fray,
 Find sweeter rest for all their needs
 In memory of their fathers' creeds ?
 Yes, even the æsthete's neutral soul,
 Which once had found in new and old
 Naught save a weary tale twice told,
 Now sees the sunflower's leaves unroll
 As never since the world was young,
 And, though faith wane in God and man,
 Finds lasting comfort in Queen Anne.

Yet even now I hardly hope
 Without offense to sing of one
 Whose life 'tis said is already run,
 Whose name her sons a few years later
 Will know no more as—Alma Mater.

As to her name, perhaps 'tis fair
 That one should draw the line somewhere,
 And Alma Mater, although not Greek,
 Is nearly as old, is quite antique.
 But she herself? Is it true as they say
 That like her name she has had her day?
 That even when at her best estate
 She was only a myth that is out of date?

A myth? I'll grant it—but tell me, then,
 What it is in the old town here
 That brings us back to its streets again?
 Are the rivers, the Fresh and the Salt, more clear
 Than other streams that we hold less dear?
 Are the wild flowers out by the Ledge more sweet,
 The moss more soft to the lingering feet?
 Are the banks of the Eddy the only spot
 Where the pines and the seawinds ever meet
 To whisper their secret and tell it not?
 Is it these alone or something more
 That stirs our memories o'er and o'er,
 That calls to our hearts and bids us come—
 Come as men to their boyhood's home—
 Come as brothers to meet with brother—
 Come as sons to a foster mother?

Yes, call her a myth if you must and will,
 But call her, if honest, a mother still;
 And greet her now while yet she stands,
 A mother's love in her smiling tears,
 Waiting to welcome with outstretched hands
 Her wandering sons of a hundred years.

Her eyes are bright with a happy pride
 As she sees us coming side by side
 From farm and workshop, near and far,

From trade and pulpit, bench and bar ;
 And her thought goes back to the time again
 When we were boys who come as men.

To say that then in the old-time days
 She taught us well, were scanty praise
 If teaching mean the steady ramming
 Of grammar and prosody, roots and rules
 Into the heads of would-be fools,
 And, just at the close of the last long year,
 Of finer points a judicious cramming
 To help one enter his college "clear."
 "And didn't we do it?" Often, yes ;
 And the boisterous joy in that first success
 Is fresh to-day. But more than that,
 A nobler debt we've owed to her
 Since first in the chapel there we sat
 Waiting uneasy with restless stir
 To have laid down the time-worn rule
 We thought a part of every school.

But after the prayer, we hear : "Young men,
 "The Academy has no rule until
 "It is broken. And now"—You know what then,
 And how we followed in mute surprise
 The lead of the master's hands and eyes
 As we clapped again and again once more,
 Until at last, with fingers sore
 And beating hearts, he let us go,
 Proudly resolving, yet humbly too,
 That as we were done by so we'd do,
 That trusted thus we would be true.—
 'Twas our first day only ; yet even then
 As the bell up yonder began to ring
 We might have heard its legend sing :
 "They come as boys, but they go as men."

For some 'tis long ago, that day ;
 Yet not so long that we need to fear
 That the mother will think us strangers here.
 Through all the years that have passed away
 She has followed our steps as best she might Keeping us always at least in sight ;
 Though in public life, perhaps, of late
 She has felt her zeal somewhat abate ;
 For things that she used to think were fixed,—
 Truth and policy,—now seem mixed,
 And are held, so far as she can see,
 As questions, decidedly, of degree.

No, not as strangers she bids us come.
 Strangers? Ah, but she knows too well
 The tale that the missing faces tell,
 And the bright eyes dim, as one by one
 She counts those over whose work is done.
 Still she looks in the crowd for those
 With whom for more than fourscore years
 She shared her labors, her joys, her fears,
 Who won for her all else above
 The respect of her children, her children's love :
 Still she looks for some younger son
 Whose task was ended ere well begun :
 Still she looks, and not all in vain ;
 For Love and Memory teach her how
 To welcome them still with the living now.

So may her children see her there
 A century hence, as young, as fair,
 And greet her then as again she stands
 Waiting to welcome with outstretched hands,
 A mother's love in her smiling tears,
 The sons of twice a hundred years.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

At one o'clock P. M., a procession, consisting of the Invited Guests, Trustees, Officers, Alumni and Students of the Academy, was formed in Court Square under the direction of RUSSELL STURGIS, Jr., Esq., of Boston, Chief Marshal, and marched to the second tent, where dinner was served.

At the conclusion of the dinner, the Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT, President of the day, rose and addressed the assembly.

ADDRESS OF HON. GEORGE BANCROFT, LL. D.

Sons of Phillips Exeter Academy: After invoking the blessing of heaven our first thought to-day is for our country, of which Phillips Exeter Academy is the contemporary. It was incorporated in the year which saw the surrender of Cornwallis; it was organized while the statesmen of America and England were concerting peace between the two nations; it was opened during the ratification of the treaty which conducted the people of the United States to its place among the nations of the earth. Exeter Academy came into life simultaneously with our republic, and rests on the principle that the freedom of the people and the culture of the people must flourish together.

The Founder, whose ancestors for three generations out of four had been ministers of the gospel, was himself trained to that office, but wanting power of voice, and having natural skill as a man of business, he devoted himself to secular pursuits, yet ever with this ruling thought: "a part of my income is required of me for the more immediate service of God;" and so by thrift and frugality he was able, in his own lifetime, to scatter most liberal gifts in many directions, and to found this Academy, which was of his own design as well as his own endowment, and by a two-fold title bears his name.

For the place of the Academy he selected Exeter, in the temperate zone of New Hampshire, and then occupied exclusively by a race of men who inherited the right to freedom and activity of mind from the best ancestry, and retained the inexpensive habits of rural life.

The Founder belonged to that class of Christians which has made itself famous in the world's history by its battling for civil freedom; and by its constant zeal for public education wherever it obtained the rule, alike in Geneva and in Prussia, in Scotland and in New England. It was his will that the preceptor of the Academy should be a Calvinist, as if to inscribe on its walls that in theology the first principle is the absolute sovereignty of God; that in morals the first aspiration should be for purity of will. For the instructors there was no limitation but that they should be Protestants, and in that day the people of New England almost to a man were Protestants: otherwise the doors of the Academy were thrown wide open to persons "from every quarter" of this land, and indeed of the world.

The constitution of the Academy was wisely framed and partook of the best characteristics of the best English schools. As in Eton, there were scholars on the foundation around whom gathered the young volunteers; and it is the rule that no one can harbor pupils but after approval and under supervision.

In the first five years of the school "the unwearied exertions" of Woodbridge, its earliest Preceptor, were baffled by his want of health. In 1788, the year in which the people of the United States adopted their Constitution, Exeter Academy found its great chief in Benjamin Abbot, on whom Heaven bestowed length of days and fixedness of purpose. He found it languishing in the feebleness of childhood; it rose at his coming into health and beauty, and during his more than fifty years, the Academy in each year gained steadily in character and in efficiency. He was a good scholar and gave thorough instruction in Latin and in Greek; as a ruler of young men he was not to be surpassed. In all the long period of his service he was never known to use a word or a tone that needed to be recalled or softened. He never reprimanded one scholar in the presence of another. In the time that I was under his care I cannot recall from any pupil a saying about him that was not full of respect. To-day, though it is seventy years since I passed from his care, my heart warms with affection as I recall his name.

To Gideon Lane Soule his most able successor, all who knew him ascribe a like character. You have to-day heard his just praise from one who knew him well and spoke of him with the eloquence of united judgment and affection. These two men, Abbot and Soule, filled up almost the whole of this first century in the life of the Academy.

In this age the Academy, by the progress of human culture is forced in its studies to take a wider range: the sciences knock at the door. The culture of the body is to be cared for: for why should not a scholar have health and the perfect development of his system. Remember that Pythagoras was famed among men for his physical power; and that the very best, most graceful and eloquent writer of prose in any language ever spoken among men, Plato, bore away the prize in the athletic games of Greece. Ever after your school days, continue to love nature and find joy in being in her presence. Let the winds of heaven play around you freely ; breathe for two or three hours a day air which you never inhale but once. In reckoning the time to which heaven limits your life, these hours will not be counted.

To-day very great numbers of us come together in this home of our early life, one in feeling ; dividing ourselves only according to our years. As we cast our eyes along the hundred arches on which stand the Exeter classes of each completed year, we turn from the last erected which rise in all their freshness and beauty to those which the waves of time have been beating into ruins. Among the many who have dropped from them before us we recall the name of Richard Hildreth the historian, son of the distinguished man who in my day was the head of the English department of the school.

John Gorham Palfrey, among most numerous competitors, has excelled everyone as the historian of New England. Jared Sparks filled a long life with most valuable contributions to the history of our country. Joseph Stevens Buckminster imparted to Boston that happy impulse which bore the town onward to its great intellectual development. John P. Hale is remembered for his services in behalf of a suffering race. John A. Dix passed nearly his whole life in the public service. Edward Everett, was among his contemporaries, swiftest in the capacity to acquire knowledge, the master of beautiful, and clear, and eloquent speech, the pure-minded patriot and statesman, the model of unshaken fidelity in friendship, a man who lived for others more than for himself. The name of Lewis Cass is written with honor in every department of the public service ; and as we turn still farther back, to an arch from which time has carried away all who stood upon it to the shores of eternity, we recall the memory of Daniel Webster, the charming companion in social life, the man who knew the way to the hearts of the farmers of New England, ever the champion of Union, one who, when he uttered with impassioned earnestness his own deepest and sincerest convictions, spoke so well, that the country names him as the greatest orator of his age.

But in the presence of this crowd of aspiring young men, the past, with all its broken arches disappears from my eyes, and I see only the great high road of humanity on which you are travelling. Press on then to advance the welfare of your country; to feel and to act for mankind. If you come to excel in knowledge do not lie down with it on a couch to take pleasant dreams, but have the courage of your opinions, and plead for truth. If you acquire wealth, remember in the employ of your wealth the great rule of life of the Founder of this Academy. If you are in public life, bend your ear and listen reverently to the counsels of lowly humanity. While your service to your fellow men must not be limited to place, remember the ever varying wants of this Academy, and with the benevolence and affection of sons, enable her to meet every new condition of her being. With these admonitions we, your elder brothers, cheer you on to action, happiness and glory.

Yet do not in reply, say to the aged, that we are passing away. To a good world belong age and youth, and to us who are to go before you let your words be, "ever and forever, live joyfully and hopefully move on."

President Bancroft said: Our first tribute must be .

"The Memory of the Founder," and I call on the Rev. Dr. Peabody, ex-president of Harvard University to speak on that theme.

ADDRESS OF REV. ANDREW P. PEABODY, D. D.

Mr. President, you call on me, I suppose, because in my official term, with reference to the Academy, I come nearest to the Founder. I have been for forty years on this board of trust,—not quite far back enough for me to have known the Founder, but I was for a year or two a co-trustee with Dr. Abbot and well remember traditions that I had from him with reference to the Founder. But you have eloquently commemorated him and have left very little for me to say. I thank you that you have made my office on this occasion so nearly a sinecure.

President Bancroft: Not so; when a man gives you a text, you should preach on it.

Dr. Peabody: You remind me of my profession, and I will preach. Our Founder was of clerical ancestry, and clerical ancestry has been the ancestry of a very large proportion of the philanthropists, the public benefactors, the lights and guides of our New England community. If I were going to talk long, I could give you a good many names, and this name of Phillips, as you know, from the very first, has been illustrious. And on our present board of trust the honor of the name is perpetuated; and perpetuated, too, in the same tone of liberal and cordial benefaction of which the founder gave the example, an example, the following of which by our Phillips is one of the prime grounds for thankfulness on this present occasion. Our Founder belonged to a class of men, not a few of whom were living in my early days, who spared that they might give. In these days of abounding wealth we have public benefactors, and noble public benefactors, but they, for the most part, give from the fullness, the exuberance of their wealth. I knew in my time not a few men who were rigidly and pinchingly frugal that they might have the means for large and broad munificence. All the traditions of our Founder show that he was a man of that class, a man whose domestic habits, probably, would have been as inexpensive as those of his comparatively poor fellow citizens; a man who, probably, never wasted a cent or spent a cent in self-indulgence, but had all along this great plan maturing, and did not leave it to mature at his death and to blossom out in his will, but he was a liberal giver in his lifetime. Taking his benefactions to our Academy, to the sister institution at Andover and to Dartmouth College, he was the greatest public benefactor, as regard pecuniary amount, in the whole of the last century. His benefactions in his lifetime far exceeded the property that he left at his death, and with scanty provision for those whom he left behind him of his own name and kindred, almost everything that remained at his death went to one or the other of these favored institutions. His forecast, his liberality, his lengthened vision, the breadth of the provisions that he made for the administration of the Academy, all follow in line with his pecuniary munificence, and have led me to regard him, as I have no doubt he is regarded by all who hear me, as a man standing almost by himself in his time and in our New England community, a man deserving of perpetual honor, and whose name, I trust, a century hence will be held in the same veneration and receive like eulogies to those which we pay to his memory to-day.

President Bancroft said: I know you want our occupations a little diversified, and so I will ask leave to read you a part of a letter to a widow's son:

"I find him to be a promising youth, and forward scholar for his age, and his age is short of ten years. His talents bid fair for distinguished usefulness could he be favored with the means of obtaining an education. I am informed that he is remarkably steady in his habits, and of a studious turn of mind, and of a fair moral character."

This letter was written in 1827 at Deerfield, N. H. It is addressed to the President and board of Trustees of Phillips

Exeter Academy, and at whose request was it made? At the request of widow Charlotte Butler. "I have examined Benjamin Butler, her son, and find him to be a promising youth and forward scholar." Now, you see this letter was written in the year of our Lord, 1827, so that that makes the way for the next sentiment I am going to offer you,

"The Academy of the Past."

And I request you,—Exeter makes nothing of turning out a Governor to a State,—I request you to listen to what may be said by the gentleman whom the great majority of the people of Massachusetts have raised to the Executive chair of that State—Benjamin Franklin Butler.

ADDRESS OF HON. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, LL. D.

Mr. President, Pupils of Exeter Academy, Ladies and Gentlemen :—The introduction given by your President has almost taken from me the power of expression. With kindness, with reverence, he has brought back to my mind that mother whose exertions brought me here more than half a century ago,—the first mother sending me to the second mother for that education I could not get at home. As I love and reverence her more than anything else on earth, next my love, gratitude and reverence go forth to Phillips Exeter Academy, from which I received all of that foundation of education which has served me through life. So young in years that I could not call her Alma Mater, but rather, alatrix, nursing mother, Exeter took me in her arms, and under the guidance of that good and great man;—methinks in my mind's eye I see him, all that was venerable and all that was sacred to the young boy whom he took in his hand, when the kind clergyman presented me to him, and, laying his hand upon my head, said, "My boy, you can do anything that any man can do in this world, if you will work." And that injunction I have ever remembered, and I came here, my friends, to bring back whatever I may have won by reason of the teachings of this school and to lay it at the feet of the dear Academy, as among the first fruits, humble and simple though they may be; and all that I have, and all that I may be, whatever that may be, belongs to our common mother, and I lay it upon her altar as the offering of my life.

I came here also as a representative of a class for which your Founder made provision, the class of young men who have their own way to make in the world, the class of young men, nay of young boys, who, poor in everything else, were happy in an unworn heart, and felt themselves equal to the battle of the world and ready to fight it out against all odds under all circumstances and anywhere. And you, my young friends, now with your greater advantages, with the opening of science,—for very little of scientific instruction was given to us then,—with the lightning flashing illumination upon your studies, with the steam to take you home to your parents at any moment, so that you are hardly away from home while here, with all the events of the world laid every day upon your table for your instruction outside of your classics, what ought you not to do for yourselves and the country in the future? And with what gifts hereafter may you not come, higher, nobler, better, purer, everything that is great, to lay on the altar of your dear nursing mother, Exeter Academy?

I speak, I trust, with a grateful feeling that comes to each and all of her sons. If we have forgotten the benefactor, the Founder, it is because to all of us, the older ones as well, I trust, as the younger, the Academy has become a living, breathing thing, which we look at and remember as the nurse of our youth, the pride of our younger years, and the dear remembrance of our older and maturer thought, when through the lapse of time our old associates fall away one by one, till now of my class but three remain on earth to my knowledge, and two of them are here. Then what is left to us as we go down the hill of life, our work having been done for better or for worse? When those that started with us fall away, what is left to us but the memory of friendships? What is there else of solace? The young world has grown up and passes by us; the old world has passed from us, leaving bright memories that cluster in the heart like the rich grapes upon the fruitful vine, warmed in the sun of friendship. My young friends who are about to graduate from this school to go into others, in a preparatory course of education, my still younger friends who are to stay here, let me give you a thought which used to trouble me when I was here, and which undoubtedly has flitted across the mind of more than one of you. Why should I strive, what is there left for me to do? No new worlds to discover; no great thing to do; all the discoveries of science are perfected; the great Newton has settled the heavens; Humboldt has settled the earth; Lavoisier and Gay Lussac have settled the materials of the earth in chemistry; Homer, Milton, Virgil, have ended all that there is in poetry,—what is there for me to do? Now, be honest with yourselves, my young friends, as I am honest with you, haven't you had that thought run through your minds more than once? Brush it away if it ever had place there. Remember that the light of science is just dawning. The best way to govern men is yet undiscovered. More than that, because more necessary, the best way to feed them is unknown. Civilization has its object in these two things: to govern and feed in the best way the largest number of men to the square acre; and if you will find any book of philosophy, if you will find any book of political economy that will tell you that, you will have done what I have failed to do, having overlooked it perhaps in the later years of a busy life. Nay, my friends, I feel as if I were treading on dangerous ground here, but still I must go on; I am so unfortunate as to believe that the best way not only of governing and feeding men on earth, but of directing their course onward and upward to the heaven above us, is yet open to a little investigation. Let me say to you one word further. In my judgment, while I do not underrate classical learning, having but very little of it, and what little I have I shall not undertake to exploit here, for I have not studied a book of quotations day before yesterday in order to have some here; and if I had, so far as the Latin tongue is concerned, I should not know how to pronounce it. For instance, when you and I were boys we were told that Cæsar said, "Veni, vidi, vici," and we read with admiration the orations of Cicero, but now we are told by the highest and best authority that what Cæsar did say was, "Wane, wede, witche," and that no such man as Cicero exists, and that he has left behind him one "Kikero." Even the dead languages change. What must we expect of the living language? Therefore, more literary culture for the scholar, for the literary man, for the author, for the poet, for the historian; nothing is so necessary; and what sort of historians the teaching of Exeter makes, we happen to know. But to-day has come a sterner age, with its sterner duties, and hereafter science and mechanical skill are to govern the world in peace or war. In war, the whole struggle now is to find out how much thickness of iron will withstand a given weight of shot; not to find out who those brave men are that have lived since Agamemnon,—only the question of engineering. Would you not, my young friends, have been quite as willing to have been the engineer of the Brooklyn bridge, that great triumph of engineering, as to have been Sir Humphrey Davy, or even, if we may make comparisons, to have been any of the first poets of any and every age? Therefore, to practical education, such as you will get here, those that must be practical men, who are to go into the business of life, who are to govern the country, who are to make its prosperity, its wealth, its glory and its honor, will have to look. For let me tell you this truth, and ask you to take it with you,—the mechanical engineer has his hand on the throttle of the universe to make it proceed hereafter.

President Bancroft said: We see how all things are connected, the Academy with the Universities, and with the Universities the schools for the professions, and with the schools for the professions, in great degree, also, the shaping of the Government of the country. I give you now, as a sentiment,

“The Work of the Academy,”

And I call on my honored friend, the President of Harvard University, to speak to us on that point.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT CHARLES W. ELIOT,
LL. D.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I am, I believe, the first speaker to address you who is not an Exeter boy. A Boston Latin school boy must needs feel diffident before those distinguished graduates of Exeter Academy. But I know the Academy from a different point of view from yours. I know it by a long line of excellent scholars which the Academy has sent year after year to the University. I know it by a large band of distinguished professors whom we have drawn from among Exeter boys. I know it from many of the best friends of my life, men of intellectual life, who were bred here. I know it as a national school, a school of national, and not of local, resort. I have observed that boys come to Harvard University from this institution, from all States of the Union, and I rejoice in this nationality of its repute. It is a source of strength to our country, for thus are created strong, intimate bonds of union. I know it is a democratic institution, where the rich and the poor sit opposite each other on the same benches. But, not knowing from personal experience, I asked a distinguished graduate of the school last evening, who is prevented from being here to-day, what it was that he felt that he owed to Exeter. He said: "I was a boy. I had lived on a farm and as a mill hand at Manchester. I went to Exeter"—he hesitated, and then broke out with a certain strong feeling which moved him. Said he, "Exeter was the dawn of the intellectual life to me." What a memorable gift! what a sunrise was that,—the dawn of the intellectual life! There is no sunrise like it, except the rise of the Sun of Righteousness. And he went on to say: "Another thing I owe to Exeter, I got there my first lesson in manners." "What was it?" said I. "I was a scrubby little boy," said he, "and I met Dr. Soule in the street and he touched his hat to me,—he always touched his hat to the boys,—and it set me to inquiring how such an unparalleled emergency was to be met." He soon learned to meet it and he is one of the most cultivated gentlemen and accomplished scholars of our day.

Let me say a few words about the future of the school. You are met here to celebrate its past, but you mean to prepare for it, I have no doubt, a better future. The Academy has many needs. It needs to have its curriculum enlarged. It needs, as his Excellency the Governor of Massachusetts has well said, to have provision made for the study of science; it needs laboratories. I have been looking about its buildings to-day. It needs better dormitories; it needs a gymnasium; for, let me assure you, that the intellectual and spiritual life are best built upon a sound physical life. And, while I desire to express my adhesion to much that his Excellency has said, let me also add that I believe that the students of this Academy should look to it for something higher than either literary or scientific training. The mechanical engineer has, indeed, his hand upon the throttle-valve of the engine of modern society, but he is not the power, and the power is not in the valve. What drives the steam engine? Not the engineer, but the life-giving sun which elaborated centuries ago the coal that is put under the boilers. What is it that you must learn here which will always be above all literature and all science, powerful though science may become? You must learn the eternal worth of character; you must learn that the ultimate powers of the human race lie in its undying instincts and passions; you must learn that above all material things, is man—the thoughtful, passionate and emotional being, the intellectual, and religious man. Here lies the source of the power of educated men—they have refined and strengthened their minds and their souls. And, believe me, the supreme powers of this universe are not mechanical or material; they are hope and fear and love.

President Bancroft said: A good word ought to be spoken for Exeter,—lovely spot, beautiful charming river, with tide water to bathe in, excellent streams to freeze up and skate upon in winter, good walks and drives in summer, good coasting and sleigh riding in winter. So I will give you as the next sentiment, and I ask my most valued friend Dr. Hitchcock, who knows Exeter by heart and loves it well, to say a word upon that theme.

“The Home of the Academy;”

ADDRESS OF REV. ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: I have some slight claim to be heard in response to the sentiment to which you have just listened. The claim is not of one born into the family, but of one most kindly adopted, much more than a proselyte of the gate. Thirty-eight years ago I came here and was here for seven years. It was my good fortune to know the man, who, I supposed, was the first Principal of the Academy, Dr. Abbot, till my ignorance was corrected this afternoon. He had finished his well-rounded service and was sitting on the verandah, waiting for the sun to go down. Dr. Soule was in the fulness of his strength. But Exeter had other notables, one of whom I rejoice to greet now, sitting at my left (the venerable Dr. William Perry); not the "old man eloquent," but more, immeasurably more,—the man of deeds and not words, though words were not wanting when the truth needed to be made intelligent in regard to any matter that called for the testimony of a medical expert; a man to whom many lives before me are indebted for their lengthened days to behold this auspicious hour. Long may his shadow hallow this beautiful place.

I am here to-day in gratitude for the many kindnesses which I received during these seven years,—from the people of my official charge, so many of whom have passed on before me to what we call the "land of silence;" kindness from the people of the town, whom I carry in my grateful memory; and, perhaps, I may be pardoned for saying gratitude, especially, to the boys of the Academy who always treated me so kindly, and whose stout shoulders are now bearing the burdens both of church and state all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The home of Phillips Exeter Academy:—Its material home needs no orator any more than Sir Christopher Wren needed a monument. Exeter has not the strength of the hills,—the strength of the hills is some way north of us,—but it has the witchery and the beauty of the plain, the beauty which pursues us along the dusty path of life, the beauty which haunts us in our dreams. Exeter is fortunate in its physical home. It has, as we have been reminded here to-day by the first great historian of our country and of our time, it has a home also in the history of the continent. It drew breath with the Constitution; it inaugurated Dr. Abbot when the government was set in operation, and its life will continue till the government and the continent and the globe shall end.

There is a home of the Academy, of which we have been reminded also to-day, in the hearts of its Alumni. The President of Harvard has said many wise things but, nothing wiser, ever, in my humble judgment, than this, "That when an institution ceases to beg it has ceased to grow." We applaud the scholarship of the past, but, Mr. President and gentlemen, we cannot forget that the Latin dictionary was that of Ainsworth and the Greek dictionary was that of Schrevelius with Latin definitions, and between the Ainsworth of your day and the Andrews, and the Freund and how many more I don't know, of to-day, is a vast difference; and the difference between the Schrevelius of your day and the lexicon which has just come from the press of the Harpers measures also an immense stretch. The classical scholarship of the country is widely different at this moment from what it was. It is at once more microscopic and telescopic. We understand the Greek particles as our fathers and grandfathers did not understand them, and we understand the relations of these languages to all the languages of the globe as they could not be understood by those who went before us. The past is of small account when it stops. It is only as the past moves on into the future that it has significance and worth. We praise Exeter for what it has been; we demand of it more in the time to come, even in the knowledge of the three languages indicated in the gift of the original founder, English, Greek and Latin,—we demand of it in the future a much wider and richer curriculum. In order to do this there must be money. We can build universities, now, on the prairie. I remember the tradition very well, when the king of Prussia started his University of Berlin, it was said it can have no history ; there are Heidelberg, and all the old universities ; Berlin can have no history. The answer was, "I know it has no past, but it shall have a future." We can make institutions now with the money that shall command the men. But better than wholly new institutions are old institutions with new blood put into their arteries. I remember very well, a few years ago, in conversing with Henry J. Raymond, the editor of the Times, he said somewhat sadly, "The New York Herald has the advantage of me in spite of all that I can do, in its years ; it will always be older than the Times." Exeter and Andover will always be older than what may be done, always ; and the best place to put money is where men began to put it the longest while ago, for the same general ends, with a wider scope of vision and with more clear and earnest purposes ; and, though I am not in conference with the Trustees of this institution and do not speak at their bidding, I should feel that I had failed in my duty as a preacher, bound to have some sort of respect to my text, whether it is regarded as inspired or not, if I failed to bespeak for Exeter Academy larger endowments for the time to come, that it may do a larger and a nobler work.

Mr. Bancroft said : Exeter Academy is not without its benefactors ; we hope the race of them will be continuous and marked by generosity. The sentiment that I give you next is in behalf of Exeter Academy, and I call to respond to this sentiment on the Hon. George S. Hale.

"Our Benefactors ;"

ADDRESS OF HON. GEORGE S. HALE.

Mr. President, and Ladies and Gentlemen : Our benefactors, for whom you ask me to speak, were men of deeds rather than of words, who showed their merits in their lives and in their actions more than by any graces of speech. And I cannot but feel that I should better represent them by a golden silence than by the most silver speech. But I cannot deny myself the pleasure of paying to them my tribute; I cannot deny myself the pleasure of making the acknowledgement which we all feel for them, if, indeed, that be necessary on this spot, on this occasion or at this time. For everything around us seems to me to speak for them and of them. That modest and unostentatious, but tasteful building, [pointing towards the Academy Hall] the product of their liberty, decorated by the assiduous labors and the taste of one of them with the counterfeit presentments of their living features; that small but useful library, for which, a few years ago, one of their number, alas, no longer living, placed in my hands a sum equal to the amount to which the salary of Benjamin Abbot was raised in the third year of his service, these constantly speak for them. But, more than anything else, those 5,000 Alumni who have risen during all these years, "rank behind rank in surges bright," and now scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific and among the isles of the sea, have come back to us from the Gulf of California, from the mountains of Nevada, and some of whom are on this side the earth or "where half the convex world intrudes between,"—all these proclaim the debt they owe to the modest but generous givers, and they do not need any words which I can add for them to-day.

The catalogue is a long one—from our Founder, for whom I might add to the epitaph which has been suggested for him and say that, "Dying without issue he made posterity—he made us his foster children," and left to the succession of benefactors whom he stimulated to benevolence his example, and to his own kindred the generous spirit which in one generation after another has prompted them to hold up the lengthening chain which unites the cautious liberality of age to the prompt generosity of youth, and to recognize the obligation which the nobility of descent imposed down, gentlemen, to his namesake, whose voice would more fitly have responded to this sentiment, if his modesty had not been equal to his liberality. This catalogue is too long for me to characterize them in detail. We have long known that the Academy has a history of its own, and I am grateful to the benefactor (Hon. Charles H. Bell) who has given to us an outward and visible sign of that history and done some measure of justice to these men. But our benefactions are not only in gifts. The faithful sons, now honorable men who have gone out from the Academy, who have won their honors by her help, and have prayed towards this Mecca and returned to it, and now have laid their honors, as they have to-day, at her feet,—historians, statesmen, teachers and divines, the wise counsellors and healers of men,—these are her benefactors. And those men, too, who have filled up the century with the service of instruction,—his Excellency will pardon me, since I am out of his jurisdiction, if I venture to differ a little from him, for, as a lawyer, he knows that he must hear the other side—I ask the Alumni of Phillips Exeter Academy whose fame they would prefer to-day, whose influence they would rather have exercised, that of Benjamin Abbot or of the engineer of the Brooklyn Bridge. The first result of that great feat of engineering was the slaughter of innocent men and women. Thousands of witnesses to the glory of the teacher have lived, and among them many still live to-day and bear testimony to his success. I am not content to accept the triumph of the engineer, I prefer the triumph of the teacher who twined the strands of character and fixed the buttresses of duty to sustain human hearts and souls on their passage through useful lives to the reward of the just.

I need not add to the deserved eulogies so often bestowed on the two Principals who nearly filled the century with their labors. I cannot recapitulate the list of honored assistants. I must acknowledge the faithful services of their successor

(Dr. Perkins), not surpassed in zeal, assiduity and fidelity and conscientiousness, for the last decade. But these benefactors are not alone. When Moses' hands were heavy, they took a stone and put it under him and he sat thereon and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side and the other on the other side and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. Among the teachers who have assisted the Principals whom we praise, there are two who have shared these labors for a quarter of the century which we commemorate. I have watched their service during a tenth of that century and I am happy to pay to them the tribute which they deserve. To them is largely due the success of the institution. I have used Scriptural names, but names which are honored in the history of New Hampshire are as good for this purpose, and I am glad to speak of George Albert Wentworth and Bradbury Longfellow Cilley,—the Aaron and the Hur who have stayed the hands of Moses during a quarter of a century; every one of you knows their services and feels that they are our benefactors.

But this is the past; the century is ended, the century of which we are proud, the century which should continue to be, as we hold it now, our glory, but which we make our shame if we do not ourselves bear up the honor, if we do not ourselves take up the lengthening chain, if we do not ourselves show that we are worthy of the benefits that we have received. The gratitude which at this moment I feel most keenly, I confess, is the gratitude I anticipate feeling to you, the gratitude for future favors, the gratitude for the gifts you are to make. "Qui sentit commodum," if his Excellency will pardon me for a Latin quotation, "sentire debet et onus,"—"He who has shared the advantage ought also to share the burden." You and I and all the five thousand, half the host whom these eminent Greek leaders Xenophon and Cilley lead yearly up to the sea in yonder halls, have shared the advantage, and it is the duty of those of us who live to share the burden for the future ; to remember that the gift is a debt and that you, that we cannot accept it without dishonor if we do not return it. Another quotation, since quotations are not inappropriate to this place, from some of the books you study : When Æneas saw the Phrygian Penates in his dream, they said to him as they left him, "Idem venturos tollemus ad astra nepotes,"—"We, the same always and forever, will bear your future descendants, by our guidance and our help, to the stars." Be that your duty, and be all of you benefactors of the Academy !

Mr. Bancroft said : Dr. Abbot always used to tell the scholars whom he saw eight or ten years after they left the Academy, "Oh, the Academy as it was when you were there is nothing at all to the Academy as it is now." So, then, I shall, in the spirit of Dr. Abbot offer you the next sentiment,

"The Academy as It Is ;"

and I ask Mr Charles G. Fall to speak to that sentiment.

ADDRESS OF MR. CHARLES G. FALL.

Mr. President :—

"You would scarce expect one of my age
To appear in public on this stage."

But, sir, I suppose I ought not to find fault with that youth which is the sole qualification for my standing here to speak on behalf of the younger graduates. The President of Harvard University has told us of the lesson in manners taught by Dr. Soule. I was here, sir, under Dr. Soule, and it recalled to my mind an instance, which is one of the most marvelous I have ever seen, of the power which personal magnetism and dignity exercise over other persons. At five o'clock we boys used to kick football. During the summer months Dr.

Soule had a recitation which was finished at half-past five ; and, on one occasion, we were kicking across the path that led from the front door of the old Academy to his house, and, as he walked down the steps we forgot his presence and almost impeded his progress. As he came along the first word we heard was, "Boys!" It rang like a clarion note ; it called a halt as much as if some General had ordered a "Halt!" while his troops were running on a battlefield.

On returning here for the first time, how the events of those days when we were here come back to us! We, sir, were here, some of us, in the days of the war. We were here in 1860 and 1861. The present Secretary of War, whom we hoped to have had the pleasure of hearing here to-day, was here at that time, and his father was President. A nephew of Major Anderson was likewise a student, and when Lewis Cass, a graduate of the Academy, resigned from a Cabinet which refused to re-provision Fort Sumter, you may be sure, sir, that the guns of Sumter re-echoed among these granite hills. Those, sir, were days when Garrison and Phillips and Seward and Greeley and Bryant and Chase were the leaders of public opinion ; and the boys of those days, sir, like the boys of the Revolution, were filled with patriotic ardor. How well do some of us remember forming in a procession and marching down to the old church where the girls of the village presented us with a flag and with a motto plaited in evergreen to place over the portals of the Academy. I can see it now, "Ducit Amor Patriæ." How long it stood there till it grew faded and sunburnt, stood there like the famous inscription of the Areopagus, "To the Unknown God."

And there is another instance which occurs to me which so well illustrates the spirit of the times that I will venture to narrate it. It was a boyish freak which in the light of to-day might deserve suspension, but those were other days and other times, and, according to the old adage, "circumstances alter cases." In the spring of 1861 every village had its flag-raising.

On one of these occasions in one of the neighboring villages, some gray-haired old sinner had expressed disunion sentiments and had insulted the flag. For this cause, in those times, sir, men were sometimes tarred and feathered. It was a graduate of this Academy who uttered those memorable words, "If any man haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot!" As soon as the story was told in the Academy, some Paul Revere, I wish I knew his name, suggested that we ought to make the old gentleman a visit. No sooner said than done; and, at midnight, some thirty or forty boys, from thirteen to fifteen or sixteen years old, started out for a six or seven miles' tramp. When we reached his house some of the leaders woke him up and told him our errand. After a little parleying he came down stairs followed by his wife and family. We told him what we had heard, which he did not deny. We told him what we desired, which at first he refused to do; but, when he saw our numbers and visions of the feathers flitted through his mind, he somewhat relented. The advice of his wife, a true daughter of New Hampshire, completed the conquest, and there, sir, in his own hallway, surrounded by his family, his idols and his household gods, we made him revoke the insult, and, kneeling down upon the folds of the dear old flag, he raised it to his lips and kissed it, not once but again and again. Then, after cautioning him against the dangers which beset the backslider, we politely bade him good night. Surely, sir, the boys of '61 were lineal descendants of the men who brewed the tea in Boston harbor.

Here, sir, is the Rugby of America. The spirit of its discipline is self-control; the essence of its instruction is self-development. While the love of knowledge is the object sought to be promoted, the perfection of its culture is manliness. Love of truth is the golden tenet of its religious creed. Not Calvin but Channing, not Edwards but Emerson, not Swinburne but Longfellow, not Calhoun but Webster, are the apostles of our faith. This revered home of learning, fellow graduates, was once our home. These classic groves once were our Academy. Through them, in boyhood's days, have walked, as we all so well know, America's greatest constitutional advocate, the monarch of the American bar; one of our most polished statesmen, who was, likewise, a Secretary of State and a Foreign Minister; one of our bravest statesmen, who was a nominee for the Presidency; our most profound historian, the Gibbon of the nineteenth century; and senators, soldiers, governors, orators, reformers, philanthropists, cabinet members, foreign ministers, judges, lawyers, physicians, preachers, teachers, authors, editors, college presidents, merchant princes, men of science and of learning. The catalogue, we have been told, of a hundred years, contains the names of more than 5,000 graduates, the true nobility of the land, the pillars of society and the state. These men whose names are familiar to us and which we love to repeat, as the child loves to repeat its catechism,—Webster, Cass, Everett, Dix, Buckminster, Palfrey, Sparks, Walker, Fitch, Hale, Butler, Wyman, Bancroft,—these are our elder brothers. It is fitting that on such a day as this, in the spirit of our favorite poet's deep-toned psalm of life, we drink inspiration from their noble lives. Would that the eye of grand John Phillips could to-day survey this scene; would that some other philanthropist, in emulation of his action, would enlarge the boundaries of this land of promise for their own children to survey at another centennial.

Some of the distinguished speakers have brought stones to throw upon the cairns erected to the memory of Dr. Abbot and Dr. Soule. While we heartily join with them in burning frankincense upon these pious altars, the younger graduates, whom I have the honor to represent, ask you to join with us in celebrating the praises of the living. And, were it becoming at this time and in this presence, to suggest a sentiment expressive of our feelings, it would be this, "Gratitude to the living instructors of Phillips Academy."

The company then rose, and joined in singing, under the lead of Prof. Oscar Faulhaber,

THE ACADEMY SONG.

BY REV. HENRY WARE, D. D.

From highways and byways of manhood we come,
And gather, like children, about our old home ;
We return from life's weariness, tumult and pain,
Rejoiced in our hearts to be schoolboys again.

The Senator comes from the hall of debate,
The Governor steps from the high chair of State,
The Judge leaves the bench to the law's wise delay,
Rejoiced to be schoolboys again for a day.

The Parson his pulpit has left unsupplied,
The Doctor has put his old sulky aside,
The Lawyer his client has turned from the door,
And all are at Exeter,—schoolboys once more.

Oh, glad to our eyes are these dear scenes displayed,
The halls where we studied, the fields where we played,
There is change—there is change—but we will not deplore,
Enough that we feel ourselves schoolboys once more.

And when to the harsh scenes of life we return,
Our hearts with the glow of this meeting shall burn ;
Its calm light shall cheer till earth's schooltime is o'er,
And prepare us in Heaven for one meeting more.

THURSDAY EVENING.

In the evening of Thursday a Promenade Concert was given in the great tent, by Reeves' excellent Band, of Providence, Rhode Island. A large and brilliant company were present, who were highly gratified with the choice music, and the opportunity for social intercourse.

This concluded the Centennial Exercises of 1883.

By invitation of the Committee of Arrangements Prof.
EDWARD R. SILL contributed

A HYMN OF HOPE,

FOR THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY.

Has, then, our boyhood vanished,
And rosy morning fled?
Are faith and ardor banished,
Is daring courage dead?
Still runs the olden river
By meadow, hill and wood,—
Where are the hearts that ever
Beat high with royal blood?

The golden dreams we cherished
Pacing the ancient town,—
Have they but bloomed and perished,
And flown like thistle down?
Nay, still the air is haunted
With mystery as of old;
Each blossom is enchanted,
And every leaflet's fold.

Not one fair hope we harkened,
But still to youth returns;
Not one clear light hath darkened,—
Still for some breast it burns:
Thought age by age is lying
Beneath the gathering mold,
Life's dawn-light is undying,
Its dreams grow never old.

As the great faithful planet
 Goes plunging on its track,
 Thought still shall bravely man it,
 And steer through storm and wrack ;
 While but three souls are toiling
 Who would give all for right,
 Whom gold nor fame is spoiling,
 Whose prayer is but for light ;

While there are found a handful
 Of spirits vowed to truth, .
 Clear-eyed, courageous, manful,
 And comrades as in youth ;
 Out of the darkness sunward,
 Out of the night to day,
 While all the worlds swing onward,
 Life shall not lose its way.

When to the man-soul lonely
 The loving gods came down,
 Earth gave the mantle only,
 Free mind the immortal crown.
 Wild force with cloud-wraith stature
 Unsealed shall tower in vain,
 And the fierce Afreet, Nature,
 Obey the sceptred brain.

O heart of man immortal,
 Beat on in love and cheer !
 Somewhere the cloudy portal
 Of all thy prayers shall clear.
 The fair earth's mighty measure
 Of life, untouched by rime,
 Through star-dust and through azure
 Rolls on to endless time.

The power that motes inherit,
 That bud and crystal find,
 Hath not forgotten spirit,
 Nor left the soul behind.
 O'er Time's dumb forces fleeting
 This victory we begin,
 Dear eye-beams and the beating
 Of heart with heart shall win.

DR. ABBOT IN 1847.

The Committee of Arrangements have received from Prof. SYLVESTER WATERHOUSE of Washington University, Missouri, the following interesting account of an interview which he had with the venerable Dr. BENJAMIN ABBOT in 1847. with permission to publish it if they should see fit.

Dr. Abbot was then about 85 years old. His venerable figure was seldom seen on the street, but his name was like a living presence. The personal qualities which, through 50 years of service, had won so wide a fame for Phillips Exeter Academy were well known to all the students. Stories of his high-bred courtesy and moral dignity of character, of his effective discipline and noble ardor in the work of instruction, were among the most cherished traditions of the Academy. An earnest desire to see so distinguished a teacher induced me to call on Dr. Abbot. He received me with cordiality and expressed the gratification which the visits of students afforded him.

"I have given," said he with a smile, "the best energies of my life to the education of youth, and it is but natural that I should not be indifferent to the regard of young folks."

Some inquiries with reference to my own objects in life served to introduce the theme which seemed to absorb all his thoughts. He explained at length his own theory of education and spoke of the progress of the Academy since it first came under his control in 1788. Alluding to the choice of a profession, he said,—

"I have always been accustomed to advise young men to take good care of their health, perfect themselves in their studies, acquire as much practical knowledge and general information as possible, and then let circumstances and the bent of their genius dictate what vocation they should follow."

It was suggested that some teachers recommend an early choice of a calling and the pursuit of the special studies which tend to promote professional success.

"No, no," he replied with great earnestness, "I do not believe that is best. I have always counseled the youth under my charge first to complete their general studies and then to follow the guidance of their natural tastes in the selection of a profession. A long observation of the careers of young men confirms the wisdom of this course."

A transition from this subject to the great men who had once been under his tuition was very natural to a teacher proud of the success of his pupils. The incidents which Dr. Abbot related about schoolboys who have since become illustrious were extremely interesting.

"Lewis Cass," he said, "was a very wild boy. One day his father, Major Cass, came to me and asked me if I would take his son.

"Certainly, but why do you ask?

"Oh! the youngster is headstrong and hard to manage. I am an officer and can govern soldiers, but that boy is too much for me.

"What does he do?

“‘Plays truant, runs away from his work, steals off without my permission to go a gunning, fishing, and swimming, and is full of all kinds of pranks.’

“‘Well, send him to me and I’ll see what I can do with him.

“‘The boy was placed under my charge. Several months later I met his father and asked him how his son was getting along. ‘Well, sir,’ said he, ‘if Lewis was half as afraid of the Almighty as he is of you, I should never have any more trouble with him.’ ”

In relating this incident, Dr. Abbot fairly shook with the laughter which the recollection of Major Cass’s answer excited.

It is scarcely necessary to add that controlled by the preceptor’s extraordinary power of discipline, the strong motive energies which led young Cass into all sorts of boyish mischief were directed to nobler objects. The results of the wise management which quickened the ambition and roused into action the faculties of a powerful nature are recorded in American history. It was, however, intimated that at Exeter the future statesman evinced more talent for practical affairs than for the details of scholarship.

In speaking of the school-boy traits of Daniel Webster, Dr. Abbot mentioned an unexpected fact. He said that “Young Webster showed an insuperable aversion to declamation. As ‘the boy is father to the man,’ it might have been supposed that the lad who was destined to be pre-eminent in oratory would have exhibited an early fondness for declamation, but no persuasions could overcome his natural diffidence.”

Dr. Abbot remarked that “there was a popular misapprehension with regard to Webster’s scholarship. It was generally believed that Webster was a dull and unsuccessful pupil, but such was not the fact. His mind rarely seemed to be occupied with his studies. His large, lustrous, thoughtful eyes were gazing about the room, or looking out of the window ; but, at recitation, the pupil who appeared not to be engaged in studious preparation always acquitted himself well. He often showed a far better grasp of the subject than those who were more familiar with the minor points of scholarship."

While Dr. Abbot was telling these anecdotes, his tones became more earnest and his eyes lighted up with a glow which these agreeable recollections kindled. It was quite obvious that age had not yet wholly quenched the fires of earlier manhood.

Heartily thanking him for his courtesies and for the rare pleasure which his conversation had afforded, I bade the venerable teacher good-bye.

The next time I saw him, he was lying in his coffin. An expression of sweet and childlike serenity rested upon his features, as though the divine hand had set upon his face the seal of a happy and well spent life.

EXPLANATION.

THE first line of the catalogue gives the name of the student, his age at entering the school, and the name of the city or town from which he came to Exeter. The second line gives his occupation, his college, college degrees, etc., and his residence, or, when not living, the place known as having been his home. In some instances, where the occupation is in one place and the residence in another, both places are given,—the former in parentheses. But where a person, after having passed many years in one place, retires from active occupation and makes his home in another, the first place is indicated by brackets. An asterisk against a name signifies that the person is not living; and the date of death, when known, is given at the right hand of the upper line.
